

THE INDEPENDENT

Nº 3,221

SATURDAY 15 FEBRUARY 1997

WEATHER: Wind and rain clearing from the west

(IR65p) 60p

Bremner:
Satire, comedy and truth
The eye

Byron:
Scandal, incest and poetry
the long weekend

Percentages:
Facts, figures and fantasy
the magazine

%

Gangsters' Whitehall link

How The Independent broke the story yesterday

Regime propped up with UK aid

Anthony Bevins
Political Editor

Whitehall gave diplomatic and trade aid to the "gangster state" of Albania as part of a policy that helped to prop up the criminal regime, it was alleged in the Commons yesterday.

Labour MPs have put down a Commons motion and questions suggesting that Foreign Office diplomatic bags may have been improperly used to send political material to Albania's ruling Democratic Party and involved in smuggling - and for the Vefa holding company, which ran one of the pyramid sales schemes and which also has links with the ruling party.

Links between the crumbling regime, the Conservative Party and the Foreign Office have been drawn bania, in possible violation of international conventions.

Links between the crumbling regime, the Conservative Party, the Foreign Office and the Prime Minister were drawn by Labour MP Dennis MacShane in a series of Commons questions, a motion and a speech that all carry privileged protection from libel action.

The Independent reported yesterday that Britain had helped the Albanian government in spite of intelligence warnings of complicity and involvement in drug-smuggling, gun-running, sanctions-busting and money-laundering.

But in the Commons yesterday, Rotherham MP Mr MacShane and 10 backbench colleagues used a motion to criticise "British diplomatic and trade support" for Shiponja - a company allegedly run by Al-bania's ruling Democratic Party and involved in smuggling - and for the Vefa holding company, which ran one of the pyramid sales schemes and which also has links with the ruling party.

The motion also claimed that official British support for the regime "may have led to violations of the Vienna Convention on the use of diplomatic bags as well as complicity in arms dealing with Rwanda and Afghanistan."

In a separate question, Mr MacShane put down a written Commons question to the Foreign Secretary, Malcolm Rifkind, asking: "What representations he has received about the use of the diplomatic bag to convey party political propaganda?"

Independent expert examination was urged in the motion for "artefacts thought to be from the National History Museum of Tirana given as gifts to the Prime Minister and other ministers by [President] Sali Berisha in 1994."

Mr Berisha, who attended the Conservative Party conference in 1991, made a state visit to London in 1994, but Number 10 said last night that John Major had been given a "fake blunderbuss".

A Foreign Office spokeswoman said the then Foreign Secretary, Douglas Hurd, was thought to have been given a "coffee set", which had since been disposed of, by an unknown Albanian minister in August 1992, but a full list of Albanian gifts for Foreign Office ministers could not be found yesterday.

In an impromptu Commons speech, during a debate on a Private Member's Bill - the Jurisdiction (Conspiracy and Incitement) Bill, which would allow prosecutions for crimes which are plotted in Britain but committed abroad - Mr MacShane said President Berisha was "the political godson of our own Prime Minister" and had been at Tory conferences with Mr Major.

John Major meets the Albanian president, Sali Berisha, in March 1994

Photograph: UPPA

As for alleged Tory links with the Berisha regime, the motion condemned "the continuing political support from the Conservative Party and its former vice-chair, the Right Honourable Member for Chertsey and Walton" - Sir Geoffrey Pat- tie MP. Sir Geoffrey, a former minister who is non-executive chairman of GEC Marconi, was out of the country and unavailable for comment yesterday. The motion also urged "Westminster Conservative Association not to allow its address to be used by apologists for the Berisha regime". A recent letter to The Times, extolling the business opportunities in Albania, carried a Westminster address that coincides with the offices of the Cities of London and Westminster Conservative Association.

In yesterday's debate, Mr

MacShane said: "President Sali Berisha has appeared on Conservative Party conferences with the Prime Minister."

President Berisha's Democratic Party was widely regarded as "a gangster organisation" linked to arms dealing, drug dealing and smuggling historic artefacts from the national museums of Albania, said the Labour MP.

"This gangster state and President Sali Berisha have very strong links with, and indeed have the patronage of, the Conservative Party," he added.

Mr MacShane said he hoped arms-to-Iraq inquiry chairman Sir Richard Scott would hold a public inquiry "into the behaviour of the gangster state of Albania and its political support in this country". Then it might be a question of prosecutions being made under powers in the Bill, he said.

Murky links, page 3

Compulsory car-free estates put motorists on road to nowhere

Randeep Ramesh
Transport Correspondent

Car-free estates, once a plank of communist social planning, are now seen as the last word in traffic solutions. Tenants of new housing estates in the central London borough of Camden will be banned from owning vehicles, if plans by councillors are approved later this year.

Under the council's scheme, new tenants would be prohibited from keeping a car within the borough boundaries as a condition of their tenancy agreement.

Similar plans are being touted in Europe to curb congestion. The largest car-free estate, in Bremen, Germany, is nearing completion and its developers point out that the benefits include "better air quality, reduction of the noise level and more green space".

Under Camden's new rules, developers would be banned from including off-street parking in their plans. Residents would risk eviction if they owned a car while living in a car-free zone and new tenants would not be issued with parking permits.

The move, if implemented, is one of the most radical anti-congestion strategies in the country. The council is committed to reducing car journeys in the borough. When a local private school asked to increase its school roll, the council demanded that the number of journeys made by parents in cars be cut by 30 per cent.

"It is an experimental, radical plan. We have one or two housing associations that have already expressed an interest in building car-free developments," said John Thane, chairman of the council's streets and transport committee. "Hardly anyone needs a car in the central areas because they have got so much public transport and can walk to so many places."

Motoring organisations gave the proposals a cautious welcome. "Many people want to use their cars for shopping and visiting people at the weekend and they should be given some consideration," said Edmund King, a spokesman for the RAC.

The RAC points out that residents in Edinburgh have a scheme whereby they give up their cars and rent a council car instead when they require one.

Green campaigners said it car free estates would become the norm "in the near future". "London is exactly the kind of place where these places would work. The city has a good public transport system and walking is always an option."

Commentary, page 21

Colin Wheeler

QUICKLY

Row over Lawrence
Lawyers accused The Daily Mail of setting a dangerous precedent by accusing five white youths of the murder of Stephen Lawrence after an inquest jury found the student was unlawfully killed in a racist attack. Pages 3 and 20

Major takes long view
John Major told a Welsh Conservative rally that Labour's proposals would result in a quagmire of constitutional change which threatened a thousand years of British history. Page 5

Banking on a bonus
The £2,500 staff at Lloyds TSB could pick up £2,500 each following the bank's record profits. Page 22

Testing the 3Rs
New primary school teachers will have to pass spelling, grammar and maths tests before starting work. Page 11

£1000

A Compaq server under £1000.
(From £995 to be precise.)

The new Compaq ProSignia 200 server range starts at an incredible £995 plus VAT. This is the first time that a Compaq server has ever been available for less than £1000. Yet, it is still a server range with all the performance and reliability features you would expect from Compaq: the No.1 in servers. Naturally, we wanted to tell you about it. Compaq ProSignia 200 servers have Intel Pentium processors. For your brochure pack please phone:

0990 50 00 35

COMPAQ COSTS YOU LESS THAN CHEAPER COMPUTERS

pentium

processors. For your brochure pack please phone:

THE BROADSHEET
Business & City	22-25
Comment	19-21
Faith & Reason	18
Foreign News	12-17
Gazette	18
Home News	2-11

Leading Articles
Letters	19
Obituaries	18
Shares	24
Saturday Story	20
Sport	26-32
Unit Trusts	25

LONG WEEKEND
Arts	4-5
Books	6-8
Country/Gardening	16,17
Crossword	2
Games	2
Motoring	20

PEPS special
Property	26-30
Shopping	21,22
Skiing	18,19
Travel	12,13
TV & Radio	9,10
Weather	32

هكذا من الأصل

news

significant shorts

Mayhew to consider new inquiry into Bloody Sunday

John Hume, leader of the Social Democratic and Labour Party, and relatives of some of the victims of Bloody Sunday have presented what they say is striking new evidence about the tragedy to Northern Ireland Secretary Sir Patrick Mayhew.

Mr Hume said after the 20-minute meeting with Sir Patrick that he hoped there would be a fresh inquiry into the 13 killings in Derry of 25 years ago. Sir Patrick had agreed to study the evidence, which included eyewitness testimony showing that the Army was shooting live ammunition into Derry's Bogside, post-mortem examination notes, recordings of Army radio messages and a copy of recent Channel 4 news reports.

"This was a very significant meeting. It was brief and to the point. We presented a substantial volume of material, which the families know very well is new evidence," Mr Hume said.

Nigeria in row over jailed Briton

A diplomatic row erupted last night after Nigeria failed to release a Briton held without charge in the African state for over six weeks.

The Foreign Office has confirmed that Bruce Henderson will not be released, despite assurances yesterday from the Nigerian government of no case against him. "We are extremely disappointed and have vigorously protested to the acting Nigerian High Commissioner in London," a spokesman said. No explanation has been given for the 42-year-old Scot's detention.

Firm wins £60m Nimrod deal

A £60m contract to build advanced flight simulators to train the crews of Britain's new Nimrod 2000 maritime patrol aircraft has been won by a West Sussex-based firm, it was announced yesterday.

The aircraft are to be built by British Aerospace for service early in the next century to hunt submarines and surface vessels and carry out search-and-rescue mercy missions at sea. The simulators from Thomson Training and Simulation of Crawley will be installed at RAF Kinloss in Scotland, between 2001 and 2004 to coincide with the arrival of the new Nimrods.

Greenpeace in solar 'raid' on DoE

The environmental protest group Greenpeace yesterday attached 20 square metres of solar panels to the Department of the Environment's new central London headquarters in a dawn raid yesterday. The move was intended to highlight how Government is failing to support non-polluting solar power, which Greenpeace wants to see taking over from fossil fuels. Greenpeace said it would give the £7,000 worth of panels to the Government free of charge, and also connect them up to the building's electricity supply at no cost. But the Environment Secretary, John Gummer (left), said his new headquarters already had many environmental features, including a pollution and energy saving combined heat and power system. Solar panels had been rejected by the Department's experts, but his officials would now discuss with Greenpeace donating the electricity-generating panels to a housing charity. He congratulated the pressure group "for keeping these issues at the top of the agenda".

Nicholas Schoon

Boxing clever for birds

Nest boxes could soon be appearing on mobile telephone masts as ornithologists bid to boost Britain's dwindling bird population.

Launching its first "National Nest Box Week", the British Trust for Ornithology wants businesses and schools – as well as housewives – to install places where birds can nest. It says modern farming and countryside management has left them with a serious shortage of natural holes to creep into. Trust director Jeremy Greenwood explained: "There are fewer hedgerows, trees are not allowed to get old and rot any more. If we don't find new holes for birds to nest in there will be many fewer of them – it's as simple as that. The answer is nest boxes."

The phone firm Cellnet is one of the companies that has agreed to help by putting boxes on transmission masts. British Sugar has also agreed to put boxes at its production sites.

British truckers caught in blockade

More than 100 British lorry drivers were still caught up in the increasingly-violent Spanish truckers' dispute last night.

One Scottish driver, a grandfather of seven, spoke yesterday of running battles between police and pickets and of how he had been threatened with violence if he attempted to move his lorry. "There have been a lot of clashes involving police and pickets near where I have been stopped," said lorry driver Norman MacDonald, 61, of Carnwath, near Lanark, who has been halted near Lerida in Spain. "I have been told that if I try to move, my windscreen will be smashed. The Freight Transport Association has written to the Department of Transport urging officials to seek European Commission help to end the dispute."

Police install CCTV monitors

Surveillance cameras have been fitted in a police prisoner transport van for the first time and at a station as part of pilot scheme aimed at preventing violence and false allegations by suspects and officers. The closed-circuit television cameras have been installed at Brixton police station in south London, and the Metropolitan police are planning to extend the pilot later this year to three other divisions. Sixteen colour CCTV monitors will be fitted in the custody suite and station yard in Brixton, along with four microphones in the charge room area. The move follows recommendations made after the death in custody of Wayne Douglas in December 1995.

Jason Bennetto

Police chief in racism row

A police superintendent branded a racist by an industrial tribunal has been moved from personnel duties. Strathclyde Police said yesterday.

The force has also called in an assistant chief constable from Tayside, James Mackay, to carry out an investigation of issues arising from the tribunal finding.

The move follows a ruling on Wednesday that PC Lawrence Ramadas, 32, from Troon, was discriminated against by Supt Gordon McPherson on the grounds of his race. The claims were denied by the superintendent who said he was "deeply, deeply offended" at any allegation that he had racist tendencies.

THE INDEPENDENT ABROAD

Austria	£5.00	France	£15.00
Belgium	£8.00	Italy	£14.50
Canada	£10.00	Malawi	£2.25
Cyprus	£11.00	Malta	£3.00
Danmark	£11.00	Monaco	£16.20
Finland	£11.00	Norway	£16.20
France	£11.00	Portugal	£16.20
Germany	£11.00	Spain	£16.20
Greece	£11.00	Sweden	£16.20
Ireland	£11.00	Switzerland	£16.20
Japan	£11.00	USA	£16.20

OVERSEAS SUBSCRIPTIONS

Per mol, 13 weeks Europe £130.70; Zone 1 (Africa, East, America, Africa and India) £184.00; Zone 2 (Far East and Australasia) £206.70. To order, please send cheque payable to John Deane International Media Services Ltd to 43 Millbank, London W1A 0BP or telephone 0171 593 5088. Credit cards welcome.

BACK ISSUES

Back issues of the Independent are available from: Historic Newspapers, telephone 01988 940370.

people

Bill Gates: The high priest of the digital age continues to confound his critics

Mr Microsoft's Midas touch puts him on top of the world

One day, he says, he'll give it all away. In the meantime, the unstoppable wealth creation machine that is William Henry Gates III has become, by many estimates, the richest man in the world. In 1996 he made at least £18.5m per day. Since the New Year, as the share price of his global software empire, Microsoft, has soared even higher, his personal fortune has ballooned accordingly and is now reckoned to be somewhere in the vicinity of $20bn.

Not for someone who embodies the digital age, whose ideas have influenced an entire generation of computer literate youngsters, academics and businessmen – and whose products are used in 80 per cent of all the personal computers in the world – the essence of the man remains elusive. Like the other self-made billionaires with whom he is now endlessly compared, Harvard's most celebrated drop-out values his privacy, rarely granting interviews and choosing to live and work in the relative obscurity of Seattle, Washington, rather than the more traditional playgrounds of the rich and powerful.

At Microsoft's campus-style headquarters, where the cult of Bill is adopted by employees with quasi-religious fervour, he is described (according to Time magazine), in the language of his medium. He has, it is said, "incredible processing power", "unlimited bandwidth" and "an ability to parallel processing". He is said to combine creative thinking with a genuine love of computers and a potent blend of drive and competitiveness. But that, say friends and associates, is only part of the story. Whatever it is that makes him tick, few would deny that his commercial judgement has been impressively consistent throughout the past two decades.

Given the near-hysteria that greeted the launch of Microsoft's Windows 95 PC operating system, it's a fair bet that Gates's mighty marketing machine will ensure a similar result for Office 97, the latest attempt at a comprehensive, off-the-shelf "business" software package – on the shelves of a store near you later this year. In the meantime, the man has broadened his horizons still further.

With such a dominant position in the software market, he might be forgiven for sitting back and enjoying his good fortune. But Gates clearly has other ideas. Already, Microsoft is muscling in on the TV business, having launched a cable and online news channel in partnership with NBC – the US broadcasting giant – and the stated aim of becoming a credible rival to CNN. And as if to illustrate the man about birds of a feather, Gates is closely involved in Dreamworks SKG, an equally ambitious film and entertainment conglomerate set up by Steven Spielberg, no small success in his own field.

Still, this drive to diversify betrays a suspicion that the future might not be so comfortable. Many within the industry have argued that Gates underestimated the commercial potential of the Internet, and has been forced into a humiliating catch-up. In addition, Microsoft's market position has already meant several run-ins with US anti-trust authorities and the threat of more to come. Watch this space.

Adam Leigh

BBC sued over collapse of Dr Who deal

The BBC is being sued for £14m after it allegedly reneged on a deal for a feature film version of Dr Who starring Alan Rickman.

Three film-makers lodged a writ in the High Court yesterday claiming that the BBC had "blatantly breached" undertakings with them by going ahead and making its own Dr Who television movie with Universal, which was shown last May.

The Dalteneys, a consortium of three film-makers including the singer Bryan Ferry and John Lily of the band Dire Straits, are demanding £1m in compensation and £13m for lost potential profits.

They say they had planned to make three big-screen versions of Dr Who and were poised to announce their film project when the BBC went ahead with a different television movie. They had lined up Alan Rickman to star as the Doctor and had hired Leonard Nimoy – Star Trek's Mr Spock – to direct.

The BBC, however, claims that it made its movie after the film rights, which had been licensed to the Dalteneys in 1987, finally expired – having been extended several times at the consortium's request.

But the Dalteneys argue that to raise money for their film project

Alan Rickman: Star who wasn't the principal consortium members, George Dugdale, John Humphreys and Peter Litten, took out second mortgages and spent their own savings.

Mr Humphreys said yesterday: "The simple fact is that we have been ruined by the BBC. They have behaved in a way that even now we find unbelievable."

Yesterday the BBC pledged to fight the consortium. A spokeswoman said: "We will vigorously contest any legal action. They had the rights from us but even with an extended period of time could not get the production off the ground. The rights reverted to the BBC."

Marianne Macdonald

Woman repeats havoc at courts with fake gun

A woman who caused chaos by pointing a plastic gun at three Court of Appeal judges on Thursday walked back into the same London courts building yesterday, waving the weapon.

The gun was loaded with plastic pellets and it was believed the weapon was fired as she was tackled by police and court officials. The woman, who has not been named, was immediately detained by security guards as she walked through the security barrier of the Royal Courts of Justice in the Strand in central London. Within 15 minutes of her arrest, the woman, handcuffed at the wrists and ankles, was taken to Charing Cross police station where she was likely to be charged with firearms offences.

The woman's first visit to the courts at lunchtime on Thursday prompted a rapid police response, but despite a thorough search, she was not found. Security guards were on high alert yesterday in anticipation of her returning to the courts.

Shortly after lunch, she walked through the front entrance, brandishing the gun and shouting: "I want to see a judge." She is believed to be distraught after losing a custody battle in the family division of the High Court.

briefing

MEDICINE

Life-support machines offer hope against meningitis

A special type of life-support technique could rescue meningitis victims from the brink of death, doctors at Great Ormond Street Hospital, London, said yesterday. The system, known as extracorporeal membrane oxygenation (ECMO) uses a modified heart-lung machine which temporarily takes over the functions of the heart and lungs. Keeping the body alive artificially buys time for the disease to resolve itself and damaged organs to recover.

Doctors studying ECMO gathered information on 12 meningococcal patients, aged between four months and 18 years, who had received the therapy in Australia and the UK since 1989.

They had been chosen for ECMO because they had heart or lung failure and had not responded to conventional treatment.

Of the twelve, eight survived, and six suffered no long-term adverse effects. Of the four patients who died, two were brain-dead and the families of the other two asked for ECMO to be withdrawn because blood supply failure meant it would have been necessary to amputate limbs.

Writing in the medical journal The Lancet, Dr Allan Goldman and colleagues said they did not think any of the patients would have lived without ECMO.

Glenda Cooper

SOCIETY

Curse of townies destroys rural life

Successful townies who move house to the country were yesterday accused by a Government adviser of destroying the village life they aspire to. Richard Wakeford, chief executive of the Countryside Commission, said townies were more likely to wave at each other from their luxury cars than gossip outside the village shop.

"People are spending money in supermarkets while bemoaning the loss of traditional greengrocers and butchers' shops. They then criticise the loss of rural bus services that they have never used," Mr Wakeford said in a speech to the Royal Town Planning Institute.

The inability to throw off urban lifestyles was turning thriving villages into virtual dormitories for the big towns and cities, he said. The Government estimates 4.4 million new homes need to be built over the next 20 years. Almost half could be in the country, but with their easy mobility the new green belt brigade may not even save the village pub.

Stephen Goodwin

PUBLIC SERVICES

Inequality in fire service

Fire officers came under attack yesterday for alleged racial prejudice after union officials revealed that only 1 per cent of brigade employees come from ethnic minorities and that only one firefighter in Scotland is black.

Ken Cameron, general secretary of the Fire Brigades Union, also calculated that fewer than 1 per cent of firefighters are women. While some of his members "bring their prejudices to work", middle and senior management had to bear responsibility for recruitment policies.

Mr Cameron called on chief fire officers and local authorities to join the union's campaign to end racism, bullying, sexism and homophobia in the fire service.

Barrie Clement

HOSPITALS

Sitting tight when Saturday comes

Hospital beds in the Irish Republic may remain unnecessarily occupied on Saturdays because of superstition, the results of a study showed yesterday. Many patients would refuse to leave on the final day of the week after completing their treatment, and doctors would agree to delay discharging them, according to a survey at a hospital in Dublin, the Irish capital.

"The superstition implies that leaving hospital on a Saturday means bad luck, and will lead to early re-admission," reported Dr Elizabeth Keane, of Ireland's Institute for Research on Ageing. "Of the 200 patients we interviewed, 13.7 per cent said they would refuse point-blank to go home on a Saturday. And 46 per cent of doctors said they would allow patients to stay that extra day because that superstition."

Dr Keane added: "This must have a profound effect on the economics and overall management of health services."

The superstition is thought to be based on the expression "Saturday flit, short air", which the study group found was recognised by many patients and medical staff.

ASTRONOMY

Universe bigger than was thought

Dramatic results from a European star-mapping satellite may force astronomers to accept that the universe is 10 per cent bigger than they previously thought. Early results from the Hipparcos satellite also look set to resolve one of the hottest debates in astronomy – the thorny question of the universe's age.

According to findings released yesterday, the age of the oldest stars is about 11 billion years, much younger than was previously believed. One of the most perplexing problems facing astronomers is the fact that the universe appears to be younger than the oldest stars in it.

The most recent calculations based on the rate at which the universe is expanding put it at between nine and 12 billion years old. But until now the oldest stars were estimated to be more than 14 billion years old.

If the Hipparcos findings are confirmed by later analysis of data sent back by the satellite the paradox will be resolved. The age of the universe and its oldest stars will be about the same.

NEWSPAPERS SUPPORT RECYCLING

Recycled paper made up 41.2% of the raw material for UK newspapers in the first half of 1996

BBC RADIO 3 CELEBRATES 100 YEARS OF GREAT MUSIC

sounding the

FROM NOW UNTIL THE END OF THE CENTURY, RADIO 3 HIGHLIGHTS THE COMPOSERS WHO REFLECT THE VITALITY AND RANGE OF 20TH CENTURY MUSIC. 'SOUNDING THE CENTURY' BEGINS WITH PIERRE BOULEZ CONDUCTING STRAVINSKY'S 'RITE OF SPRING' TOMORROW AT 7.30PM.

3 000 RADIO 3 90-93 FM

سكنا من الامم

On the scrapheap: A people robbed of their dignity while their leaders prosper

Details emerge of murky links between Britain and Albanian government

Andrew Gumbel

In the early summer of 1992, a meeting was held in the Dajti Hotel in Tirana that included a Foreign and Commonwealth Office employee visiting from London and a British adviser to the Albanian presidency called William Bennett. The man from the FCO came with a number of heavy cardboard packing cases sealed with plastic ribbon.

"These are the things you have been expecting," he told Mr Bennett. "Just make sure nobody knows where they came from."

The scene was witnessed by Alex Standish, a freelance business consultant and journalist. He watched one of the boxes being opened and saw that it was full of stickers advertising Albania's ruling Democratic Party. According to Mr Standish, the stickers had been produced in Britain for the local elections that took place in June 1992 and brought out under diplomatic cover.

That raises the possibility of two breaches of law. First, a violation of the Vienna Conventions on the use of diplomatic bags, and secondly the illegal participation of foreigners in an Albanian election campaign.

The episode is one of several murky links between Britain and the government of Albania now emerging, following the collapse of several pyramid investment schemes believed to be connected to both organised crime rackets and the ruling order in Tirana. Mr Bennett, who now works as a barrister in London, was the first of two British nationals who gained unparalleled access as advisers to President Sali Berisha in the first two years of his tenure in office in 1992-93.

Both Mr Bennett and his successor Guy Roberts were promoted by the Westminster Foundation for Democracy, a right-wing organisation active in emerging free societies that has close ties to the Conservative Party. At the time, Mr Bennett was the only foreigner allowed into the President's inner circle – an arrangement that was looked on with disapproval by a number of Western diplomatic missions.

Mr Bennett's position un-

Picking up the pieces: Albanians scramble for usable rubbish on a tip in Tirana as their country totters under political repression and violence Photograph: Bernard Bisson/Sygnia desecrated the cosy relations being developed directly between the Conservatives and the Democratic Party – relations that appear to have had a significant bearing on British policy as the Albanian government became more autocratic and corrupt over the following years.

Foreign Office officials subsequently posted to Tirana have – in common with their counterparts from other European Union countries – told visiting journalists until very recently that the country was progressing nicely on the path to democracy and a free-market economy, that the Democratic Party was popular, and that any corruption was merely a hiccup on the road to prosperity after half a century of brutal communist isolationism.

The fact that this line was peddled even by diplomats known privately to have quite different views on the corrupt, criminal mess that Albania was turning into, suggests there was a specific policy to paint the Berisha government in the best possible light.

Foreign Office statements in the past year have protested at the more blatant violations of political and personal freedoms, and Britain has been less gung-ho in its pro-government sympathies than some of its European partners, but the overall sense of sympathy for the Berisha regime has remained intact.

With Albania beset by street violence and political repression in the wake of the collapse of shady pyramid investment schemes, the policy followed by Britain and the rest of the EU has visibly crumbled. Yesterday, in response to The Independent's assertions that the West largely ignored warnings of collusion between the Albanian government and organised crime, the Foreign Office appeared keen to be on the side of the angels. It said it "refuted the suggestion of unconditional support for the Albanian government" and acknowledged Tirana's "far from perfect record on democracy and human rights" – something its officials in the field have not chosen to dwell on.

Diplomatic sources have acknowledged a lack of political reporting from the Tirana embassy. British officials have asked questions recently about the status of the ambassador, Andrew Tesoriere, who has been in place for a year and is currently on an extended mid-tour leave of absence.

Opposition figures and intellectuals in Albania have complained that the British mission has paid them and their views scant attention in recent months, preferring to keep close to the government and develop the potential for commercial opportunities first and foremost.

It is not clear if Mr Tesoriere's superiors have been dissatisfied with him, or if he has been doing their bidding all along but policy priorities are now undergoing rapid changes. Britain's mission in Albania is tiny, especially by comparison with those of Italy and the United States, the two biggest foreign players whose own record has been far from unblemished.

Leading article, page 19

Daily Mail stands by Lawrence case charges

Jason Bennett
Crime Correspondent

Leading lawyers accused a national newspaper of acting as judge and jury yesterday after it took the unprecedented step of calling five unconvicted men murderers and publishing their photographs.

In a front-page story the Daily Mail accused the five young men of killing Stephen Lawrence, the black student, and it challenged them to sue if they thought that the newspaper was wrong.

The allegation followed a verdict of "unlawful killing" by a coroner's jury that took the extraordinary step of adding that the murder of Lawrence, 18, who was stabbed to death at a bus stop in south-east London in 1993, was "a completely unprovoked racist attack by five white youths".

The five men who were accused by the Mail, David Norris, 20, brothers Neil Acourt, 21, and Jamie Acourt, 19, Gary Dobson, 21, and Luke Knight, 20, all from south-east London, have already faced a public and private criminal prosecution for the murder, but both cases collapsed. All five refused to give evidence at the coroner's court.

The police and legal system have come under attack for failing to convict Lawrence's killers.

Lawyers are angry at the Daily Mail's decision to accuse the men of murder, because they believe it is a dangerous precedent that will encourage "trial by newspapers", and because it makes a mockery of the legal system.

They also argued that because people taking libel cases are not entitled to legal aid, it would make it too expensive for most members of the public to try and challenge newspaper allegations of this type.

Headline news: The front page of yesterday's Mail, its editor Paul Dacre (below left) and Stephen Lawrence

Nigel Pascoe QC, chairman of the Bar Council's Public Affairs Committee, said: "What happened to Stephen Lawrence is a vile and wicked killing carried out by evil racists." But he added: "I believe this [allegation] is a watershed, from newspapers offering critical hard hitting comment to being accusers, and judge and jury."

"sue us" – something most people cannot afford. It's a slippery slope and could lead to injustice." Conservative MP Roger Gale, chairman of the Conservative back bench Media Committee, told BBC Radio 4's World at One: "I think this is tabloid journalism at its worst because it's trial by newspaper."

But on the same programme Peter Wright, the Daily Mail's deputy editor, denied the paper was acting like a "kangaroo court" and said: "We have invited them to put up a defence. So far they have failed."

Lawyers representing the five white men named by the Daily Mail are believed to be considering legal action.

A solicitor representing one of the men said: "Anything's possible. If we decide to do it you will know about it."

A spokeswoman for the Attorney General said that the Mail had not committed a crime and that it was up to the five people who had been named to decide whether they want to pursue a libel case.

Lawyers for Lawrence's family are currently preparing to bring a civil action against the five men claiming damages, in an action similar to the one which was brought against OJ Simpson in the United States.

Over the last four years all five have at various times been charged with Lawrence's murder.

However, according to the Southwark coroner Sir Montague Levine, "a wall of silence and fear", preventing witnesses coming forward, hampered a successful prosecution.

A case against two of the youths was abandoned by the Crown Prosecution Service in July 1993 when it ruled that there was insufficient evidence to secure convictions.

The CPS decision to drop that criminal prosecution prompted the Lawrence family to launch a rare private case against the five young men.

After the private prosecution was launched, two of the five were discharged by a magistrate at the committal hearing and never stood trial.

The remaining three were formally acquitted at the Old Bailey last April, after a judge ruled that evidence from a friend of Lawrence who witnessed the attack was unsafe.

Saturday Story, page 20

If you'd like to know more about our unique whiskey, write to us for a free booklet at the Jack Daniel Distillery, Lynchburg, Tennessee 37352 USA.

WHEN YOU VISIT THE TOWN SQUARE of Lynchburg, Tennessee, there are a couple of sights you can expect to see.

One is our town dog, who's been around forever. The other is Mr. Herb Fanning, who's been around even longer. Mr. Herb drops into Jack Daniel Distillery often, to make sure we're still mellowing our whiskey the way we did when he worked here. Which is to say, the same way our founder prescribed back in 1866. So far, we haven't disappointed Mr. Herb. Nor any of the folks who enjoy a whiskey made the old-time way.

JACK DANIEL'S TENNESSEE WHISKEY

هكذا من الأصل

Major

Anthony Brown

For the first time in his 10 years as Prime Minister, Tony Blair has been forced to admit that he is not a natural politician. He has been described as a "man of the people" who has brought a new freshness to the job. But in the eyes of many, he is a man who has been forced to play a role. He has been described as a "man of the people" who has brought a new freshness to the job. But in the eyes of many, he is a man who has been forced to play a role. He has been described as a "man of the people" who has brought a new freshness to the job. But in the eyes of many, he is a man who has been forced to play a role.

A lesson for the PM

Louise Jury

Blair's first lesson is to stop being a man of the people. He has been described as a "man of the people" who has brought a new freshness to the job. But in the eyes of many, he is a man who has been forced to play a role. He has been described as a "man of the people" who has brought a new freshness to the job. But in the eyes of many, he is a man who has been forced to play a role.

Bold-headed arrow

Clare Garner

Nothing ventured, nothing gained. That was the motto of the hundreds of lonely hearts who pitched up at the New Century Love Raffle in central London yesterday in search of a new series of blind dates. St Valentine's might be failed to deliver, but the television show was right on target. After rummaging through an assortment of self-esteem and making quick, measurable gains, bold-headed troops off to tackle the problem head-on. The date shows are not needed. Eighteen-plus is a single-bitch. Would you go on next series of blind dates? Why not? It was, of course, a love raffle. Pink tickets for the girls, blue for the boys. "Blind Date is not a dating agency," say the rules. "It's a serious attempt to match couples with a view to a quick, tidy work. I didn't get one lettered heart. Oh, sure there's someone

RAPID RELIEF FROM THE MISERY OF CONGESTION.

ONLY TRAFFICMASTER ORACLE WARNS YOU OF A JAM UP TO TEN MILES AWAY.
AND ONLY ONE CAR HAS TRAFFICMASTER ORACLE FITTED AS STANDARD.*

THE VECTRA FROM VAUXHALL

TO ARRANGE A TEST DRIVE CALL 0800 455 466 TO FIND YOUR NEAREST VAUXHALL DEALER. FOR MORE INFORMATION ON TRAFFICMASTER CALL 0990 862 260. *STANDARD ON 1997 MODEL YEAR GLS, SRi AND COX VECTRAS (OPTION ON LS). AVAILABLE IN THE UK MAINLAND ONLY. TRAFFICMASTER CAN BE FITTED RETROSPECTIVELY AT EXTRA COST. SUBSCRIPTION TO TRAFFICMASTER IS FREE FOR THE FIRST YEAR AND PAYABLE ANNUALLY THEREAFTER.

صكزا من الوطن

Major launches crusade to save constitution

Anthony Bevens
Political Editor

Fear of the unknown, the risk of change, and the threat to "a thousand years of British history" were yesterday presented by John Major as Labour's stark alternative for voters.

The Prime Minister told a Welsh Conservative rally in Holywell, North Wales: "We either stick to the people and policies that are bringing success and progress, or we risk it."

In the next few weeks, Mr Major said, the country faced a choice in an election. "It can change direction, veer off into the unknown, import new ways, and take a hammer and chisel to our constitution."

"Or it can choose the tried and trusted path we are on - a path bringing prosperity for more people as day succeeds day. We offer progress, not reckless change." That message, he said, would ensure Conservative victory.

But with Mr Major gearing himself up for an inquisitorial role against Tony Blair in next Thursday's Commons debate on the constitution, Opposition leaders reacted scornfully to yesterday's speech.

Paddy Ashdown, leader of the Liberal Democrats, said: "This is a desperate attempt by the Conservative Party to cling on to power by clinging to the past."

Mr Major's extraordinary case seems to be that everything's fine, that there's nothing wrong with politics... The fact is that the British constitution is strong, and has lasted this thousand years, precisely because people in every age and

Old guard: Tory supporters at the Welsh Conservative Conference in Holywell, yesterday, at which Mr Major denounced Labour policy on the constitution Photograph: Rob Stratton every generation have had to modernise it, put it back in contact with its people."

For Labour, John Prescott said the Tories' only constitutional proposal was a defence of the power of hereditary peers to make law, something Labour would abolish. "So while hereditary peers are left, unaccountable to anyone, cut off from the interests of ordinary people, with their thousand-year-old powers, people in Wales and Scotland are to be deprived of a greater say in how their countries are to be run."

Portraying Labour as gloom-mongers, people who prayed for rain when the sun shone, Mr

Major said that Britain had a smile on its face; it was the success story of Europe. Repeating a refrain of his speech, he said that it became more obvious "as day succeeds day" - yet another hint, or less, that it remains in the Conservative interest to hold off the election until the latest available date: 1 May.

The Prime Minister said that if the country stuck with the Tories, they could make Britain

"the best place in the world to live", with more choice in education; more services offered by National Health Service GPs; more sporting, cultural and artistic "fruits of the Lottery"; more jobs and better training. The alternative was a Labour government that offered as a priority a return to the "quagmire" of constitutional change.

After 18 years of planning, in Opposition, Mr Major said that Labour policy was "peppered with so many holes that it makes a sieve look watertight", adding: "They still cannot answer the most basic questions about their priorities in government."

Mr Major then dug into the detail of the key questions he would be putting to Mr Blair in

6 We can import new ways and veer off into the unknown, or choose the tried and trusted path we are on next week's Commons debate, and warned: "Labour would throw a bone to the yapping dogs of Welsh and Scottish separatism in the vain hope they might then follow Labour."

They would gerrymander Britain and play party politics with our nation for pure political advantage.

"A thousand days of Labour government could ditch a thousand years of British history. It's a poor bargain. Better to keep the history and ditch Labour."

A lesson in history for the Prime Minister

Louise Jury

Baffled academics yesterday questioned the Prime Minister's grasp of Britain's past after he suggested devolution would destroy "a thousand years of British history."

"It's a totally incomprehensible remark," said Dr Paul Addison of Edinburgh University yesterday.

Wales was united with England only in the 16th century and, for most of the 1,000 years, Scotland was an independent country and Scotland and England were fighting each other. "It's very hard to understand what he means, unless he means English history. Britain is less than 300 years old as a country, since the Act of Union in 1707."

Arguably the Tories had already come close to leaving British history behind when they signed up to the Common Market, Dr Addison argued. "They put an end to it by abandoning most of British sovereignty."

Spending any time in Scotland made one immediately conscious of how ignorant English politicians could be. "But surely he can't be that ignorant? He'll just have to go back and sit his O-levels again," Dr Addison said.

Dr John Roberts, formerly the head of Merton College, Oxford, whose most recent work was A History of Europe, said the Prime Minister's comments did not square with the facts. "Even the conquest of Wales hadn't begun 1,000 years ago," he said.

And when it came to "playing party politics" with the nation, Dr Roberts said there was nothing new in that. The union between the separate nations of the United Kingdom had always been a matter of expediency. "It has always been in response to emergencies that the whole thing was put together," he said.

The invoking of historical argument in politics was always alarming, he added. "I guess there are a lot of people in the Tory party who do have very crude views of British history and they like this sort of thing."

Bernard Crick, professor in political theory and biographer of George Orwell, said it was an "idiotic" reading of events. "It shows they don't know any real history. They haven't a clue about what has happened in Ireland or Scotland. It's conjuring with a popular and wholly English distortion of history."

Even since the Act of Union, Scotland had continued to have a different clerical, legal, educational and local government system, the professor said.

Love raffle: Lonely hearts complete Blind Date questionnaires Photograph: David Rose

Bold-hearted seek Cupid's arrow at a Blind Date

Clare Garner

Nothing ventured, nothing gained. That was the motto of hundreds of lonely hearts who pitched up at the New Connaught Rooms in central London yesterday to audition for the new series of Blind Date.

St Valentine might have failed to deliver, but Cilla's television arrow was right on target. After rummaging through unpromising post bags, suffering an intermittent slump in self-esteem and indulging in a quick, inconsolable sob, the bold-hearted trooped off to tackle the problem head-on.

The dating doors opened at 11am and no appointment needed. Eighteen-plus - tick. Single - big tick. Would you like to go on next series of Blind Date - why not? It was, effectively, a love raffle. Pink tickets for the girls, blue for the boys.

"Blind Date is not a dating agency," say the rules. "It's not a serious attempt to match up couples with a view to marriage. But for some, it was quick, tidy work. 'I didn't get no flowers, no nothing,' bemoaned one tattered heart. 'Oh, I'm sure there's someone out there," came the consoling reply from Norman. "When are we getting married, Tiger?" said the pouting 30-year-old, much made-over.

From the multiple applications of shimmering blue lipstick to the flashing bow-ties and brand new Levis, the contestants were dressed to impress. A gaggle of girls with uniform blonde highlights mocked their elderly sisters who were seated at the front.

Looking for the world as if they were back in the bingo hall, the pensioners lined the front row. "First in the supermarket queue, first to the Blind Date audition," sniped one. "I don't think by that age I'd care what I did," another contributed.

Some filled in their questionnaire forms ferociously; others agonised for hours, as they say in the waiting room for love. Martin fell firmly into the first category. Do you smoke? "Yes. Loads of marijuana." Marital status? "Never." Done any modelling? "Yeah, lots of porn modelling." Do you have a party piece or special talent? "Don't ask."

Same-sex groups of eight were escorted to the next door room at half-hourly intervals. In the spirit of the game, men select women and vice versa. "Why did we want to go on Blind Date?" asked a discerning Dave. "My boyfriend dumped me and I thought: 'I'm fed up with long relationships. I just want some fun,'" replied Mandy, 32.

"I was going out with this guy for seven years and he wouldn't marry me," explained Dawn, 30. "Waste of seven years if you ask me. I want three children and a big garden." And presumably a man.

The odds were stacked against them though. Only 150 of the 39, 850 applicants who will be interviewed at locations across the country between now and May will qualify for the next series.

James took refuge in the rules. "Some of the dates are in the British Isles, so if you are only coming on the show in the hopes of winning a trip to an exotic location, you may very well be disappointed," he read with a satisfied smile on his face. "The 150 lucky ones who make it onto the next series will only go to Brighton or Bognor anyway," he rejoiced.

Dixons

ALL THESE DEALS

HALF PRICE

Scotch
E180
VIDEO TAPE
3-PACK

• 9 hours of recording time.
• Extra grade plus.
Total Separate Selling Price £13.47.
Was £7.99.

£6.69

Dixons Deal

Dixons

There's a great deal going on

One voucher per purchase. Not for use with other offers.
Offer ends Wednesday 19th February 1997.
Branch use only - discount using code 4 (Head Office offer).

HEADPHONES

SANYO
PH25 OPEN BACK
HEADPHONES

• Large earpiece for comfort.
• Lightweight.
Was £13.99.
Dixons Deal

£6.99

MINI-SPEAKERS

KOSS
SX30 ACTIVE
MINI-SPEAKERS

• Built-in amplifier.
• Volume control.
• Bass and treble boosts.
Was £39.99.
Dixons Deal

£19.99

AUDIO TAPE

BBB
CDS90 CHROME
AUDIO TAPE
7-PACK
Was £8.99.

£4.49

CAMCORDER TAPE

JVC
EC45 VHS-C
CAMCORDER TAPE
5-PACK

3 1/4 hours recording time.
Total Separate Selling Price £30.
Dixons Deal

£14.99

VIDEO TAPE

MGM
E240 VIDEO TAPE
4-PACK

16 hours of recording time.
Total Separate Selling Price £20.
Dixons Deal

£9.99

BATTERIES

VARTA
ALKALINE 'AA' SIZE
BATTERIES 10-PACK

Full alkaline power.
Total Separate Selling Price £10.25.
Dixons Deal

£4.99

هنا من الاما

"The tragedy of my work is that I could never save the people I photographed."

Don McCullin has been photographing wars and human rights disasters since 1964, when he took his camera to Cyprus, and the Congo. He has often risked his life to bring back pictures to show the world what was happening, pictures which he hoped might help to end the horrors he witnessed. In these pages, Amnesty International invites Don to talk about his work and what he thinks all of us can do to help.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY DON MCCULLIN

Amnesty International: working worldwide for the release of prisoners of conscience, fair trials for political prisoners and an end to torture, extra-judicial executions, "disappearances" and the death penalty.

The first time I saw a dead body was in Cyprus. Someone had shot this old man and his two sons. They were lying in a little house, warmed by the Mediterranean sun and when I opened the door, the sweet stench of fresh blood drenched my nostrils. In the next room there was a burning straw bed and the mixture of smoke and blood have stayed with me to this day. Often, if I get near a bonfire in the garden, I'm suddenly transported into a daylight dream of murder and death.

"The dead make their own statement."

I can see that scene now: the bodies on the floor, a woman standing there crying. It's her new husband she's looking at, they'd just got married. I'd let myself into that house quietly having knocked several times. I thought, my God, they're really going to punish me for intruding on this terrible scene but they didn't. They gave me a sign to stay and go ahead and record it, as if they wanted people to see. They wanted a voice. The dead make their statement and my picture records it. The dead don't choose to give their statement like that, but it's the only way left for them.

I wanted my pictures to bring messages from the dead and the near-dead in prisons and death camps, to the rest of us living. Saying 'For god's sake do something'. It's the same job Amnesty does. The world's in a worse state today than when I started taking pictures and Amnesty is the only answering service out there, picking up on those feeble cries for help.

"What's your name, soldier?"

When I take a picture I may be the eyes of the newspaper's readers, but I can't be their conscience. It's hard living with my own.

The picture on this page, I took in the Congo. My baptism was the wicked experience of seeing what was done to these young men by mercenaries in Stanleyville, now Kisingani.

I'd disguised myself and flown up on a secret aeroplane which was bringing mercenaries in from Leopoldville, now Kinshasa. I got to the airfield at dawn. A tropical thunderstorm was just finishing, the ground was wet, it was warm and everyone was sleepy. There was a platoon of men standing in the dawn, and this Hercules revving up, waiting to go. A man came down the line with a clipboard and said, 'What's your name soldier?' I thought, I'm in trouble now. I said 'McCullin' and he said 'Not on the list? How do you spell it?' So I spelt it and he said, 'Right, climb on.' When we got to Stanleyville there was fighting going on. We drove from the airport past a lot of dead bodies to an old hotel by the river. There was terrific commotion, coming and going, distant explosions. After ten minutes a jeep screamed into the compound and said, 'Any guys just in from Leopoldville, get down to the docks, we've got problems, the C.O. wants you over the river.'

"They were dragging them by the penis."

I was carrying a little weeny camera bag with two cameras, twenty rolls of film and a meter. A mercenary came up and said 'Have you got a weapon?' I said 'No' and he said 'Well get one'. I ignored him because it was abhorrent to me to carry a weapon. I jumped on this truck with all the soldiers and got down to the docks. I was young, easily impressed and I hadn't declared myself. I kept my camera in my little bag, but my eyes were wide open to all that was going on around me.

Out of the corner of my eye I saw a huddled bunch of human beings, all bleeding and shaking. It was a most distressing scene. A mercenary said, 'Haw, you should have been up here ten minutes ago, they were dragging them around behind trucks by their penises.' He told me 'That lot are for the chop. They'll shoot them and kick them in the river' And I was in shock because it doesn't matter how tough you think you are, there's no kind of preparation that can get you ready for such sorrowful things.

"It's appalling to witness a murder."

To witness people about to be killed is appalling because you see them looking at you, pleading with their eyes. They sense your pity, their eyes get bigger, appealing to you to help, to get them out of this terrifying plight and of course there is absolutely nothing you can do.

You lose something of yourself when you witness people die. You walk away injured. There's a danger, since people have had so much realism from certain disgusting Hollywood directors that reportage pictures will be looked at as art. I've never considered my work art, I have watched too many people die. I've seen people murdered in front of me and I've seen public executions. You can never learn how to behave under those circumstances, because there's no way to behave, other than be outraged.

"The last air in his body was calling for God."

The old, famous cheery question is 'Do you ever help anybody?' The tragedy of my work, of thirty years photographing wars and human rights disasters is that I could never save the people I photographed.

I often wept secretly, when no-one could see. Once in Beirut I saw two men standing in a stair well with their hands up, while their families were being dragged down stairs. The families were looking at the men as they came down. I went with the families and came back just in time to see these two men being shot in cold blood at point blank range. I can never forget that one of them had an Astrakhan hat on and a kind of light raincoat, and that the other was saying Allah as he was dropping. It was as if the last air in his body was calling for God. I went into the stairwell and gripped the wall and said to myself, take a hold of yourself, because this is only the beginning of... of what's going to happen here today.

"I've never considered my work art, I have watched too many people die."

"They were celebrating the death of a girl."

There was a day in Beirut when they killed several hundred Palestinians. I saw some of them die, but there was no way the camera was going up to my eye because a gunman came up and said 'If you take pictures you'll be killed yourself - I suggest you leave this area.' As I left, I heard the sound of a lute being played. They were celebrating the death of a Palestinian girl about twenty years old lying in the winter mud and rain of the street. I thought my God, if I take this picture it could cost me my life. I looked over my shoulder very quickly and furtively and thought I can't walk past this. So I whipped that camera to my eye and took one frame and hurried away and as I went I heard somebody pleading behind me, and gun fire and I turned to see an old man falling, he was shot in the stomach at point blank range. I thought I must get out of here. You walk away from those situations and thank God you're alive, and feel guilty because somebody else paid the price for this mayhem. Next day I went back and there were mounds of corpses.

"When you think you're going to be killed..."

It's eerie, walking round a city where human life and human rights mean nothing. You walk round several corners and it looks normal, and then you walk round a corner and the most extraordinary things are going on - you see men being herded to their deaths. I went up to this man, a gunman from East Beirut with whom I'd spent the previous day, and I said 'What's going on with these men?' He said 'They're going to get the chop' and I said 'No, please don't do this. The press are here, everyone can see what you're doing, this is wrong, please don't do this'. He said 'Listen my friend, go away, it is none of your business' and they took these men into the yard but I pushed my way in behind them. It had been raining and this old factory yard was all wet and damp under a weird sky. I saw one of the Palestinians looking at a gunman loading a fresh magazine into his rifle. I've often tried to transplant myself into that man's position. The shock of fear that goes through you when you think that you're going to be killed is just...unthinkable. It's unthinkable. I know that from Uganda when I thought I was going to get murdered in the Makindi prison. I know what that poor man felt like seconds before he was put to death.

"I thought my God, this is the end of my life."

In Uganda, I was arrested. They came to my room and made me pack my bags. I was dragged out and chucked into a jeep and driven to the Kampala police station, which was chock-a-block with people and two or three other journalists. About seven, when the day was beginning to fade, a man in a check jacket walked into the police station - he must have been a plain clothes security man. He asked the sergeant, 'Who are these people?' And the sergeant said 'They are journalists.' He said, 'Journalists? They are dirty people.' I was sort of sniggering. But a few minutes later we were pushed and punched outside and squeezed into an army jeep. It sped out of the police compound up the hill and I thought 'They're going the wrong way, the airport's the other way'. They took us to the military prison at Makindi where a bunch of soldiers were drinking beer. They all grabbed sticks and rushed up shouting 'Get out of the car, get out of the car.' We were made to sit on the floor cross legged, heads bowed and they started kicking us. Luckily they had rubber combat boots so we didn't get any broken ribs but they were whacking us with their sticks. Then they took us down into the courtyard, well inside the prison. They stood us against the wall and that's when I thought 'My God this is it, you know, 'the end of my bloody life'. My mouth was as if someone had emptied a tube of superglue in it because nothing dehydrates you quicker than fear. It completely locks your jaw.

"I lay on this mattress covered in blood."

But they took us down to some cells. We were there four days. There was a man lying on the bed. He looked in a bad way. Another man told us 'Take no notice of him, he's for the chop. He's a Tanzanian cop they caught at the border.' I heard the rattle of keys and marching feet and I ran and hid in this cell which had no lights. I heard them beating him. It went on and on and I heard the pleas and the screams and the thudding blows. Then they left. The

Below:
The Congo, 1964.
A young man is tormented and humiliated by soldiers before being shot and his body thrown into the river.

Minutes before this picture was taken, this man and others had been dragged behind trucks by ropes tied to their penises.

k is
e ed."

and thought I can't walk past the that camera to my eye and not id hurried away and as I went sly pleading behind me, and ge ned to see an old man falling be stomach at point blank range get out of here. You walk and situations and thank God you f guilty because somebody d e for this mayhem. Next day there were mounds of corpe think you're going to be killed.
alking round a city where huma rights mean nothing. You're corners and it looks normal, a e round a corner and the me things are going on - you see me so their deaths. I went up to the a from East Beirut with me previous day, and I said 'What (these men?'. He said 'They he chop' and I said 'No, please
The press are here, everyone re doing, this is wrong please
He said 'Listen my friend, of your business' and then the yard but I pushed my way
n. It had been raining and the d was all wet and damp and one of the Palestinians looking siding a fresh magazine me tried to transplant myself sition. The shock of fear no when you think that killed is just...unthinkable know that from Uganda going to get murdered
I know what that poor
before he was put to death led, this is the end of my life was arrested. They came to le me pack my bags. I was chucked into a jeep and drove a police station, which was with people and two or three
About seven, when the jeep faded, a man in a check jacket police station - he must be other security man. He asked 'Who are these people?' And I they are journalists.' He said
y are dirty people.' I was a few minutes later we were hed outside and squeezed into sped out of the police station and I thought 'They're going the airport's the other end the military prison at Makd
f soldiers were drinking beer sticks and rushed up shouting r get out of the car. We were he floor cross legged, head started kicking us. Luckily combat boots so we didn't get but they were whacking us
Then they took us down into cell inside the prison. They the wall and that's when I this is it, you know, 'the end'
My mouth was as if someone a tube of superglue in it hydrates you quicker than locks your jaw.

stress covered in blood."
us down to some cells. We
s. There was a man lying on in a bad way. Another man for the notice of him, he's for the man cop they caught at the rattle of keys and marching aid in this cell which had no n beating him. It went on the pleas and the screams blows. Then they left. The man was in the most pathetic state. They'd busted his jaw and really mashed him up.

When people are beating and killing other people, there's a fear in them as if the unarmed, defenceless people they're killing can hurt them. I think a lot of people have to whip themselves up to a frenzy before they kill or torture. They look for excuses, because they know they don't have the right.

When the guards came back I fled back to the dark cell and lay on this mattress covered in piss and blood stains - which were also all up the walls - and heard them drag him out.

"I wished Amnesty knew about me."

One day they said they were releasing us, but I noticed that someone had come and dug four shallow graves in one corner of the prison yard. I thought 'They're going to kill us after all. They're not going to let us leave,' and they didn't let us go, they took us back to the cells.

In that darkness, what I wanted was anyone
- anybody - any soul in the world, any person who could reach out to me and become my voice, become my lifejacket.

I thought about Amnesty International and how I wished they could hear about me so they could try and get me out. I longed for someone to tell Amnesty that I was missing.

Next day, I don't know why, we were freed.

Later, we met two guys who had been in the killing wing and we heard what went on there.
The way they killed the prisoners there was that they used to lie twenty men on the floor and give the twentieth man a sledge-hammer.
He would have to go along and crush the skulls of all the lying down men. Then he was thrown on the floor and one of the soldiers would finish him off.

"Who needs a ringside seat for a murder?"

When I was in a situation, seeing what was going on, I hoped my pictures would stir people up and help stop those things happening. That was the only justification for intruding on some of those fearful scenes. Who needs to have a ringside seat at a murder? Who needs to have the best seat in the house for a murder? Only the killers. Not the witness, not me.

I used to try and get rid of my own guilt by saying 'It's vital to get these terrible statements back to Britain'. At the Sunday Times we used to pore over them and look for the strongest pictures. We never let the readers off easily. I tried to save my conscience by saying 'I am doing this to show people what they can't see for themselves. People are basically decent, they're bound to want to help.' My pictures were printed in the Sunday newspapers, in the colour supplements or in the main body of the paper, but of course in the news reports there would never be any kind of exhortation for the reader to do anything. The newspaper's job is to tell it like is and to let the readers make their own minds up.

"I used to wash my hands in blood."

The reason I am so pleased to do this appeal for Amnesty International is because I can say the things those news reports didn't. I need to say these things. I want to get them off my chest.

Often when I came back from abroad, people would ask, 'Where have you been?' and I'd mumble Vietnam or Biafra or Beirut and they'd say 'Oh, it must have been awful,' and they'd ask a question and if I answered it, and came out with something appalling, they'd look round and say things like 'Is there any more coffee?' or 'Is there any more wine?'. They'd try to get away from me. Sometimes I'd want to say 'Piss off' and just walk away. How do you

"I ask the dead why they pester me, they say I didn't do my job properly."

talk about what you've seen? I was a witness.
I'd seen every form of barbarian behaviour that monsters can offer. I saw it all. I brought back the pictures, the evidence. Blood used to flow in my life as if there was a permanent storm raging - I used to wash my teeth and hands in blood. When someone doubts my word I sometimes think I've been living in a fantasy or a nightmare world. But I've got the pictures.

"Memories fade, like old newspapers."

When I fish out some of the old colour magazines from up in my attic and look at my pictures, I wonder, did they do any good? Did they open people's eyes, to the horror, and their responsibility.

Sometimes I think - who knows? - maybe my pictures even helped to nurture Amnesty's beginnings. I hope so, because Amnesty does wonderful work and deserves to be supported by everyone who values the freedom to read a newspaper. Like the people reading this one.

But people have to act fast, because they fade, those old newspapers. They go yellow, like memories. The people who died fade and become less real. We can no longer see them, or touch them and we forget they were once alive and breathing, just like us.

Many of the people in my pictures are taking one last look at the world. In a lot of my pictures, the victims look curious as if they see something I can't - as if they can help me - as if they think I'm the one who's the victim. If you look at the pictures closely, it's as if the dead are really trying to help. They're trying to co-operate, obviously, and what they're saying 'I'm dead, look at me, look at what they've done to me, please tell the world what they've done to me, so the world can do something to stop the horror.'

"I see the dead in crowds and on buses."

I think a lot about all the people who died, whose deaths I saw or photographed. I see them in the streets, on buses and trains and aeroplanes and at airports. I feel as if they're floating out there in cloudy images. I see them when I least need to see them. As I'm sitting here now, looking at the most blossom drenched garden, I can still see that vision of those men dropping in that stairwell in Beirut.

I'm surrounded by ghosts and images and things that tap me on the brain and say, 'Hey, mister, remember me?'

'Remember me in the market place in Saigon when they brought the two jeeps at dawn and stood me at a stake?'

'Remember me, the man they said was a 'bomber?'

'Remember me, the headless chap you saw lying by a river restaurant one night after the bomb went off. And me, the pregnant woman who was dead? And all us headless people under the tables? And me, the fellow with a sucking wound in his neck and chest that was making that terrible noise. Hey, remember us?'

I ask the dead, what do you want? They don't speak, but I think they're probably saying,
'You didn't do your job properly because, you know, we're still here and as you see, Don, our numbers are growing.'

"Amnesty is us, and we are Amnesty."

The ghosts are right. The world is in a worse way now than it was when I began taking pictures. We must all do what we can.

That's why I hope that everyone who reads this will join Amnesty International and will support its work. Amnesty needs our support to bring hope and help to the people locked away in the prisons and dungeons. For many people who are suffering horribly at the hands of brutal men, it's the only hope there is.

I don't know how many people work for Amnesty, or how far their influence reaches, but it can never be far enough. Thousands, tens of thousands of people are in prison with no-one to speak for them - most of them probably we don't even know about. There are people being degraded, tortured, killed, at this very moment. We must help.

Amnesty International can't change things on its own, it's them and us together. You can't sit back and say 'Oh well, Amnesty will work it out.' We have to work it out with Amnesty.
Amnesty is us, and we are Amnesty.

Amnesty is just lots of people like us.
Amnesty International has no-one else to turn to but people like us. If Amnesty fails, its demise will be very convenient for all the butchers in the world. If we fail Amnesty, we fail ourselves.

"Pick up your pen and use it."

The horror will go on and on and on. It won't stop until people like us - people like you - get involved and decide to stop it. You would know this instinctively if you'd seen a man die in front of you.

When you see a man being murdered in a doorway and he is looking at you and crying, you are naked. You're naked. You don't have any feelings, you are destroyed. You don't have any implements at hand to protect this man, help this man, shield this man. One human dying in front of another is a naked experience, believe me.

You have a means to protect, help and shield the people who are at this moment being hurt, killed, or flung in blood-soaked cells. It is your voice, your pen. Pick it up and use it.

Beirut, 1973.

Left:

A Palestinian family is huddled out of their home by gunmen belonging to the Christian Phalange. In the stairwell, the men of the family are held at gunpoint with their hands up.

Right:

Moments after the first picture was taken, I rushed back only to see the two men shot dead at point blank range. One of them, as he fell, was saying:
'Allah, Allah, Allah' as if the last breath in his body was calling for God.

I want to be a member of Amnesty International. Here's my annual subscription fee:

£21 Individual ☐ £27 Family ☐ £7.50 Student ☐ Under 22 ☐ Claimant ☐ Senior Citizen ☐

I wish to donate £500 ☐ £250 ☐ £100 ☐ £50 ☐ £25 ☐ £10 ☐ Other ☐

Mr/Ms

Address

Postcode

Please charge my Access/Visa/MasterCard number:

Total  Card valid from  Expires  H34

Signed

If you are paying by credit card, please give the name of your card and

Please tick if you do not wish to receive mail from sympathetic organisations. ☐

To join or make a donation please call 0345 611116. Calls are charged at local rates.

TO: DEPT. AA, AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL UK, FREEPOST, LONDON EC1B 1HE.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL

All at sea: the case against polluters of the Welsh coastline

Dirty fight: Friends of the Earth protesting outside the Department of Transport yesterday (main picture) about the damage from the Sea Empress disaster (above), which killed at least 5,000 birds (below). Photographs: Adrian Dennis/PA

Nicholas Schoon
Environment Correspondent

Friends of the Earth yesterday vowed to prosecute those to blame for the Sea Empress oil disaster if the Government's Environment Agency fails to.

The environmental group is convinced there is enough evidence to launch a criminal prosecution for the pollution caused after the tanker ran aground at the entrance to Milford Haven harbour a year ago today.

But it is not yet sure who to prosecute: yesterday its campaigns director Tony Juniper said the Department of Transport, the Milford Haven Port Authority and the tanker's managers, Acomarit UK, were all possible candidates.

Leigh Day & Co, lawyers for Friends of the Earth, have written to the Environment Agency to say that unless it initiates a criminal prosecution by 15 April the group will launch a private one.

The letter complains that the agency, which has strong powers to prosecute water polluters, has had nearly a year to consider prosecuting - but has still not yet decided whether to do so. The agency confirmed yesterday that its own investigations are continuing.

"What's going on?" asked Mr Juniper. "It's clear that this disaster was avoidable. If justice is to be done, then we must have proper enforcement of environmental law."

Yesterday Friends reinforced its point by dumping several pails of Sea Empress oil on the steps of the Department of Transport in Marsham Street, central London. The pollution can still be found from time to time on Pembrokeshire beaches because it is lifted out of remote coves or off the seabed during storms and at high tides.

The fully laden tanker struck rocks then lost a small quantity of its cargo of North Sea crude as it entered Milford Haven in south-west Wales, on 15 February last year.

But over 70,000 tonnes, much more than half its cargo, was lost during the many attempts to salvage the ship over the next week. Tugs failed to hold the tanker in place as strong tidal currents dragged it over the rocks, hoing it again and again.

Eventually it was refloated and brought into port. The ship has now been repaired and is going back into service. But Pembrokeshire suffered Britain's most damaging oil spill since the Torrey Canyon struck rocks off Cornwall 30 years ago.

The Government's official accident investigation report will not be published for about another month. This has examined the initial grounding and the salvage operation carried out jointly between the Coastguard Agency's Marine Pollution Control Unit and the port authority, and widely regarded as having been bungled.

The Marine Conservation Society said that despite the recommendations of the Brer inquiry by Lord Davidson, there was still no permanent fleet of salvage tugs stationed around the UK to be called on in tanker emergencies. The DoT maintains three very powerful "supertugs" - one near Dover, Kent, one off the West Country and one near the Hebrides - in the winter only.

Environmental groups and local people were furious that there was no public inquiry into the disaster, even though it happened just three years after Britain's previous big oil spill. In 1993 the tanker Braer lost all power, struck the Shetland isles and split all its cargo. Far less damage was caused along the Shetland coast than in Pembrokeshire because raging storms dispersed the oil.

But the Sea Empress oil washed onto 120 miles of cliff and beach, much of it in Britain's only maritime national park. Five thousand sea birds were known to have been killed, but many more died because the bodies of most oiled seabirds never reach the shore.

There was a ban on all fishing in surrounding waters, but that has been progressively lifted. The harvesting of shellfish is still not allowed from between the low and high tide marks and a couple of small sea areas. Nor can edible seaweeds and samphire be harvested.

Nearly £2m is being spent on around 100 scientific studies into the impacts of the spill, most of which are not yet complete. It is known that there was massive short term damage to wildlife and the breeding of some seabirds was set back. Fortunately the long term damage appears, so far, to be minor.

PROTECT CHILDREN: DON'T MAKE THEM BREATHE YOUR SMOKE

Chief Medical Officers' Warning
1 mg Tar 0.1 mg Nicotine

Winter alert: are you paying too much for vehicle rescue?

Before you renew your motoring organisation membership, find out how Green Flag compares: 6000 mechanics on call, 3 million members, 4 levels of cover - and membership starting from just £29.50.

TO JOIN
CALL FREE ON
0800 00 13 53

QUOTING REFERENCE C3100

Lines open Monday to Friday 8am to 8pm, Saturday 8am to 1pm, Sunday 10am to 6pm

Green Flag
Breakdown repair and recovery

GREEN FLAG IS THE EXCLUSIVE SPONSOR OF THE ENGLAND FOOTBALL TEAM
www.GreenFlag.co.uk

15 FEBRUARY 1997 • THE INDEPENDENT

It report

STEPHEN WALL, former private secretary to John Major, was censured for failing to give full details of policy changes on an expense. The failure to consult was a regrettable omission on Mr Wall's part. After being ambassador in Portugal, became UK Permanent Representative in Brussels. Has since been knighted.

the words "excellent" and "courageous" to describe the Government's response, again emphasising his was "not a political role."

Saferworld has been less guarded. Its representative urged the European Union Conference to introduce a EU Code of Conduct on arms. Although the Scott Report criticised outdated export controls as "an unfettered power to impose whatever export it thinks fit" Britain's export controls structure seems to have remained intact.

Scott also called for permanent scrutiny over exports concluding a "control that would be needed and are requisite at a parliamentary democracy." The Report was published. Ministry of Defence reviewed its disclosure of arms is still not forthcoming. Many believe UK should adopt a stance similar to the USA which exports over a certain amount subject to review.

The Scott Report criticised the "absence of a clear purpose for export controls can only be used, Sir Richard, created a dangerous gap between the law on the one hand and the government policy on the other. The Df, MoD have their own guidelines, there is a obligation to ensure they are followed. A Code, now official, Liberal Democrat endorsed such grey areas.

In another letter to call for a European Code of Conduct, the bishops of Coventry and Chelmsford said the tragedy had forced police to confront the link between availability and income. But the bishops say: "Acceptance of this link alongside a willingness to be vastly more destructive to some of the poorest in the world."

the COOPERATIVE BANK

transfer
r debt.

VE BANK VISA

COOPERATIVE BANK VISA

UR BALANCE FOR

9% APR
GUARANTEED UNTIL JULY '97

price transfer rate • No annual what you could save • New card
PR variable • Keep your credit bank with us • Limited offer • Line a week • Call now.

00 79 79

11.11.97 CALL FREE 7 DAYS, 24 HOURS
0800 00 13 53

ONLY ONE AVAILABLE INDEPENDENTLY FINANCED BANK IN THE OFFICIAL SPONSOR OF THE ENGLAND FOOTBALL TEAM
BANK OF AMERICA BANK OF AMERICA BANK OF AMERICA IN BANK OF AMERICA BANK OF AMERICA BANK OF AMERICA

news

AAAS conference: Help for problems in families and medicine

The secret of domestic bliss is all in the genes

Reports by Charles Arthur Seattle

Violence and conflict in modern families with stepchildren or step-parents is partly due to ancient genetic programming which tells us to take more care of close relatives than strangers, say scientists.

While there is no "gene for caring", many species take more care of their immediate children because they have more of the same genes than strangers – including unrelated children. But that is causing problems in the modern age, said Stephen Emilen, professor of biology at Cornell University, New York, at the American Association for the Advancement of Science conference yesterday.

Professor Emilen said: "The nuclear family is becoming less common, replaced by growing numbers of single-parent and stepparent families, and at the same time we are seeing an increase in child abuse, delinquency and truancy."

But he said that by making people more aware of this predisposition – through education programmes similar to those about genetic disease – such problems could be lessened, or averted. "Be aware that if you are in a stepfamily, or dealing with one, there is a statistically greater chance of problems," he warned.

He also suggested involving grandparents in child-rearing, especially for single-parent families, and suggested that tax incentives might induce people to take part.

Studies of more than 300 bird species and 80 kinds of mammals, including humans, have shown that parents and grandparents tend to help their children, effectively protecting the genes that they have passed on to them.

But though this worked well for humans ever since the hunter-gatherers on the African plains 4 million years ago until the middle of the 20th century, that has recently begun to break down, said Professor Emilen.

"All else being equal, the closer the kinship, the greater the tendency for animals to co-operate," he noted. But he found in a survey of social scientists' reports that there was a correlation between the structure of the family and children's well-being.

He found that stepchildren are more often physically or sexually abused, or killed, than children in intact families. Stepparents spend less time and effort with their partner's previous children than with their own, and are far more likely to commit sexual abuse: the incidence of sexual abuse of stepdaughters in one study was eight times greater than for biological daughters.

Also, children in stepfamilies leave home earlier than children in intact families, while the marriage itself tended to be less stable too: divorce in American families was more common in second marriages, and that frequency grows with the number of stepchildren.

Professor Emilen commented: "The rules we evolved with don't work well in the greater diversity of family types present today."

"We didn't ask for these biological predispositions; they came as part of a bigger genetic package that worked just fine for our ancestors for thousands of years."

Gotcha: A 50ft arm from the space shuttle Discovery captures the orbiting Hubble space telescope, successfully completing the first stage of its mission to install two state-of-the-art instruments that will allow astronomers to see deeper into space. Photograph: Reuters (courtesy NASA)

Hormone clue to mystery of Aids

What happens if you put male mice in a cage with female mice? If you are researchers into HIV, the virus that causes Aids, then you come up with clues to a potential treatment for the infection. And, bizarre though it might sound, it also involves pregnant women.

According to Robert Gallo, one of the world's leading Aids researchers, the clues to the new treatment came about by accident – "or, as my colleague said, good observation of an inadvertent experience".

In an experiment in which mice were infected with malignant cells from Kaposi's sarcoma, a skin cancer common in Aids patients, a researcher accidentally put male and female mice in a cage together. Subsequently, he found that female mice which were in the early stages of pregnancy when they were inoculated with the malignant cells did not develop tumours.

Dr Gallo, director of the Institute of Human Virology, said that his team – which had carried out the Kaposi's experiment – then tried to find a hormone produced in women at the same stage of pregnancy, and discovered one which kills malignant Kaposi's cells without affecting pregnancy or being toxic, yet also promotes bone-marrow growth. It also has an antiviral effect, killing virus cells, which would make it effective against HIV.

The hormone, human chorionic gonadotropin (HCG), has now been used effectively in trials as a skin treatment against Kaposi's sarcoma. But Dr Gallo told the American Association yesterday that his team is still unsure exactly how the hormone works, though they are closing in on the precise part of the protein that performs the functions.

He was also downbeat about the progress of research into cures and treatments for Aids and HIV, saying that any sort of vaccine could be years away.

And he warned that recent progress with mixtures of drugs, called protease inhibitors, and the discovery of people who appear to be naturally resistant to HIV infection, was not a definite indication that we are at the "beginning of the end" of Aids.

American scientists furiously denounced the multi-billion pound "alternative medicine" industry yesterday, describing it as "quackery" that diverts people from the truth while preying on their need to believe in a personal healer.

The growth of alternative therapies, worth $14bn (£8.8bn) in the US alone, betrays the fact that many treatments have been scientifically discredited, said Barry Beyerstein, of Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, British Columbia. But, he said, "a fertile climate for quackery has been created by the low level of scientific literacy among the population, and vigorous marketing of extravagant claims by so-called healers, which appeal to wishful thinking."

Sometimes, alternative practitioners twist the reporting of scientific tests which have carried out on their therapies in order to give a distorted picture of their effectiveness, said Saul Green, of Zol Consultants in New York.

"After 15 years of studying and searching, I have not found one 'alternative' treatment for cancer that I could endorse," said the former cancer researcher. "I realised that the proponents of these therapies depended on the fact that patients were deeply impressed with the printed word ... Advertising, not medical science, was the life-blood of these dubious methods."

He contrasted the situation today with that in 1903 and 1938, when investigative journalism exposed the frauds being carried out by the patent medicine industry.

Robert Park, of the department of physics at the University of Maryland, said that "many of the claims made for alternative therapies violate basic laws of physics. Homeopathy relies on a 'serious misunderstanding' of chaos theory, while the suggestions of 'biofields' which extend beyond the body have no basis in physics."

Ursula Goodenough, professor of biology at Washington University, said: "The problem is not the nice person in the health store who believes what's being sold is healthy. Rather, it's the industry built on pseudo-science that preys on hopeless people. It fills me with moral outrage. Scientists carry an obligation to protest [against] abuses of scientific knowledge."

£39

anywhere any car

gives you the reassurance of RAC whenever you travel. Even if you're a passenger in someone else's car, we'll cover you. 82% of cars on the spot. If we can't find a car for you, we'll tow you to a nearby garage, free of charge. Callouts and our labour are free too – you only pay for parts.

You can tailor your cover to meet your needs – with Joint and Family cover, plus our 'At Home' and 'Recovery' services. A year's worry-free driving from just £39. Anywhere, any car. Call us today to find out more.

0800 029 029

join us

Interact on the Internet. <http://www.rac.co.uk>

Please quote code SS2480 when you phone

FREE RAC UK ROAD ATLAS WHEN YOU JOIN US

Yes – I want to join the RAC. Please tell me how I can join from just £39.

Mr/Mrs/Miss/Ms

Address

Postcode

Telephone

Send to: RAC Rescue, FREEPOST, Bristol BS38 7AU. (No stamp needed.) *Rescue costs £39 if you pay by Continuous Credit Card Authority or Direct Debit. Cash enrolment price is £44 and discount applies to your first year membership only. All prices include an enrolment fee. Phone lines open Monday-Friday 8am-6pm, Saturday 9am-5pm, Sunday 10am-4pm. 570008/SS2480/97

BRUSSELS

£10.07

AMSTERDAM

£11.30

PARIS

£12.88

DUBLIN

£13.82

LUXEMBOURG

£16.47

EDINBURGH

£20.29

FRANKFURT

£22.31

Up to 891 miles on one tank. Golf Tdi

THIS DOES NOT CONSTITUTE AN OFFER FROM VOLKSWAGEN, ABOVE PRICES REFER TO COSTS OF A ONE WAY ROAD JOURNEY FROM CENTRAL LONDON EXCLUDING FERRY CHARGES, ROAD TOLLS, INSURANCE OR MAINTENANCE COSTS. COSTS ARE CALCULATED USING AN AVERAGE FIGURE FOR THE PRICE OF A GALLON OF DIESEL IN A GIVEN LOCALITY ON 25TH & 26TH/1/97, AND THE GOLF TDI EUROMIX CONSUMPTION FIGURE OF 56MPG.

Trainee teachers to face tests in the three Rs

Lucy Ward
Education Correspondent

New primary school teachers will have to pass spelling, grammar and maths tests before being let loose in the classroom, under plans to be announced next week.

A new national curriculum for primary teacher training will require student teachers to prove their competence in the basics of English and maths, as well as demonstrating that they can control classes and keep lessons interesting.

The curriculum, details of which leaked out ahead of schedule yesterday, disrupting a planned series of pre-election announcements, specifies for the first time what aspiring teachers should learn. It replaces less prescriptive government-set criteria.

Gillian Shephard, Secretary of State for Education and Employment, launched outline plans for the largest ever shake-up of teacher training last September amid growing concern that newly qualified teachers were entering the classroom lacking vital teaching skills.

She called for a curriculum specifying an essential core of what must be taught to trainee teachers, including knowledge of their specialist subject, what their pupils should be taught, effective teaching and assessment methods and the standards of achievement they should expect from pupils.

Under the new curriculum, trainees will be expected to demonstrate understanding of English language basics, including spelling and punctuation. They will also have to show that they have mastered structure, word derivations and the sound system underlying speech.

Trainees must learn how to get pupils to sound out words and write sounds as letters, and to be articulate and coherent in expressing meaning. Students must also be able to teach standard English.

In maths, students will learn how to teach mental arithmetic, and how to spot common mistakes. They will also be required to develop a specialist subject to A-level standard.

The curriculum will include firm guidance on teaching methods. It will require trainees to prove ability in "interactive" whole-class teaching - the method used in Pacific Rim countries which have a strong track record on basic skills.

The Department for Education and the Teacher Training Agency, which developed the curriculum, refused to comment on the content until the official announcement.

The Labour Party claimed that Mrs Shephard had hung on the coat-tails of its education spokesman, David Blunkett, who called last year for teachers to be given more training in how to teach effectively, including whole-class teaching.

The party said it would go further than the Government and consider reintroducing the probationary year for new teachers immediately after completing their training, allowing them to consolidate skills and ensure they had chosen the right career.

Mr Blunkett also hit out at the Government for "taking 18 years to reform teacher training".

Shipspace: Pupils of the Admiral Lord Nelson school in Portsmouth re-enacting the Battle of Cape of St Vincent at the Historic Dockyard. The battle, 200 years ago yesterday, helped Nelson seal his reputation for daring deeds as the Spanish fleet was destroyed. Photograph: John Voss

Labour spoiler on child crime

Anthony Bevins
Political Editor

Labour's home affairs spokesman, Jack Straw, yesterday upstaged a long-awaited government discussion paper on child crime due out next week.

The Home Office policy proposals will "examine what more can be done to identify children at risk of offending".

But Mr Straw stole a march on the Government yesterday, expanding on previous pledges to tackle youth crime, and committed Labour to making "our streets and communities safe and secure".

He said, in a speech in his Blackburn constituency: "For too long, the problems caused by disorder and anti-social behaviour have been placed low down the political agenda by central government. This attitude must change. Disorder and low-level offending have a profound effect on people's quality of life. It is time to act."

In addition to Labour's manifesto commitments to halve the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders, and to get 250,000 under-25s off benefit and into work - "an anti-crime policy as well as an economic policy" - Mr Straw proposed an eight-point action plan to tackle bad behaviour by the young.

The package included child protection area orders, to deal with under-10s out, unsupervised, late at night; a replacement of repeat cautioning by a final warning system; parental responsibility orders, to make parents face up to the responsibility of their children's conduct; and a new duty to make local authorities work in partnership with the police to reduce crime.

Mr Straw said: "We have to develop local responses to the problems that most concern our communities. The precise problems and the responses will vary across the country, but the approach will be the same."

"What are people most concerned about, and how can these problems best be tackled, using the resources of the police, the local authority, and all the other key players in the local community?"

Currys Britain's best ever range of dyson

DE STIJL
Bagless Dual Cyclone Cylinder Cleaner
De Stijl - meaning "the style" in Dutch - inspired by the 20th C modernist De Stijl movement.

All the features of the DC02 plus:

- Super efficient HEPA filters - ideal for asthmatics and hayfever sufferers.
- Unique Backguard screen - kills harmful bacteria, moulds and allergens on contact.

BUY NOW PAY 10 MONTHS LATER
CURRYS PRICE
£249.99

Exciting colours and advanced features

PLUS

BUY NOW PAY 6 to 10 MONTHS LATER

ON THESE DYSON VACUUM CLEANERS

ANTARCTICA SOLO
Dual Cyclone Upright Cleaner
■ Powerful 1300 watt motor
■ Unique bagless system gives 100% suction 100% of the time
Model DC01 Antarctica Solo

BUY NOW PAY 6 MONTHS LATER
CURRYS PRICE
£199.99

DC01 AND DC02
Dual Cyclone Upright and Cylinder Cleaners
both featuring:

- Powerful 1300 watt motor
- Unique bagless system gives 100% suction 100% of the time.

Model DC01 Upright Cleaner

BUY NOW PAY 6 MONTHS LATER
Was £199.99

SALE PRICE
£189.99

SAVE £10

Model DC02
Cylinder Cleaner
BUY NOW PAY 6 MONTHS LATER
CURRYS PRICE
£199.99

ANTARCTICA SOLO
Dual Cyclone Cylinder Cleaner
■ Powerful 1300 watt motor
■ Unique bagless system gives 100% suction 100% of the time
Model DC02 Antarctica Solo

BUY NOW PAY 6 MONTHS LATER
CURRYS PRICE
£199.99

ABSOLUTE
Bagless Dual Cyclone Cylinder Cleaner
All the features of the DC02 plus:

- Super efficient HEPA filters - ideal for asthmatics and hayfever sufferers.
- Unique Backguard screen - kills harmful bacteria, moulds and allergens.

BUY NOW PAY 6 MONTHS LATER
CURRYS PRICE
£229.99

Only Currys bring you all this

PREMIER SERVICE

OVER 1000 SERVICE TECHNICIANS AVAILABLE WITHIN 2 HOURS DELIVERY GUARANTEED

EXCLUSIVES

EXTRA VALUE EXCLUSIVE MODELS
For exceptional value, look for the wide selection of superb models and offers exclusive to this retail list.

2 DAY DELIVERY MONDAY TO FRIDAY
Choose ANYDAY. Plus professional installation service. Ask for details, prices and availability.

TAKE IT HOME NOW
Most items are in stock ready to take away at once. We'll be happy to carry your purchase to your car.

SAME DAY
IN-STORE REPAIR SHOP
Expert service available 7 days a week (same day, Monday to Friday and live within 10 miles of a Currys store).

AWARD WINNING
Currys Premier Advantage Account offers instant Credit and lets you take advantage of any credit offer without any credit checks. See us now for details.

LOWEST PRICES
ON THE SPOT

Find the lowest price for the same product and service, compare our price with the lowest price found elsewhere in the UK. If you find a lower price elsewhere, we'll match it. We'll never be beaten.

All expenses after 10% savings. See us for details of your nearest store. We'll be happy to carry your purchase to your car. See us now for details.

APR 2000

IL ELLE

Fashion Spring/Summer
1st March 1997

In association with
PAUL MITCHELL

Order a copy from your nearest newsagent.

THE INDEPENDENT
IT IS. ARE YOU?

£10.07

£11.30

£12.88

£13.82

£16.47

£20.29

£22.31

Golf Tdi

FROM JAGUAR TO CENTRAL LONDON
ED USING AN AVERAGE FIGURE FOR THE
A CONSUMPTION FIGURE OF 50MPG.

international

Germans taste the trauma of the dole

Imre Karacs looks at the results of a collapsing economic miracle

Duisburg — Dieter Held did not pay much attention to the man with the clipboard who kept coming around to the workshop, watching, never asking a question, yet taking copious notes. Two weeks ago the visitor's purpose was revealed. He was a member of a team of management consultants hired to root out inefficiency, and the fruit of their labour was a report 2,200 names long, headed "surplus to requirements". Dieter, a fitter aged 30, found his name on the list.

"It felt like a roof collapsing over your head," he said. Dieter had been unemployed before, but had learnt his new trade during a previous recession and was confident he could ride out the next one.

Now he is not so sure. He has fired off some 40 job applications, but all he has had back are straight rejections. He is now widening the search beyond Duisburg, a city of half a million where one in five is out of work, but employers in the neighbouring towns do not even bother to reply. Duisburg has the highest jobless rate for a big city in western Germany, but the situation in the rest of the Ruhr is only marginally better, and what vacancies exist tend to be in fast food restaurants. The steel industry, where Dieter used to earn his daily bread, is down-sizing everywhere.

While he is idle, the state will pay him about DM2,500 (£915) a month — 63 per cent of his last take-home pay. After a year, the dole falls to 53 per cent, and after two years he will only be entitled to supplementary benefit. "Money will be tight," he says, but that's not what worries him most.

No society holds the unemployed in high esteem, but German society is especially harsh in its judgement. "When you lose your job, friends tend to take a step back," Dieter said. "No one wants to hang out with a loser." Dieter will only confess to his friends if he has not found work by the end of March.

He will then disappear, following millions of others who have already shut themselves away to hide their shame. "They become anonymous," said Gisela Averkamp, who runs a charity which helps people on the dole. "Most stay at home and watch television all day. It is unbelievably difficult to persuade them to come to the unemployment centre."

The unemployed vanish from their favourite pubs, sever trade union links and disenfranchise themselves from public life. The gradual decline in voter turnout matches the rising rate of joblessness. Behind those closed shutters there is seething resentment, but it is yet to be articulated. Demonstrations, such as the 60-mile-long human chain formed in the Ruhr yesterday in protest against unemployment, are staged and manned mostly by union members desperate to avoid the fate of their ostracised former workmates.

The state, paranoid about provoking the unemployed, goes out of its way to keep them sweet. The jobless are summoned by courteous civil servants every three months for an interview, but are otherwise left alone. There are no queues at the labour bureaux, and the cheques arrive regularly without fuss. Because working Germans contribute to a state-run insurance scheme, the dole is a pay-related entitlement irrespective of personal savings and the earnings of family members. The jobless are even allowed to earn DM580 (£214) a month in part-time work.

Thus does the Federal Republic preserve social peace at a time of Weimerian unemployment levels. There are no stone-throwing youths lurking in Duisburg's neatly kept parks, no graffiti defacing public buildings on its litter-free streets. Factories that fall empty are rapidly converted into concert halls and theme parks. School-leavers, potentially the most explosive segment of the emerging under-class, are kept off the streets by a wide range of interminable retraining schemes. There are an estimated 2.5 million Germans on various projects who are not counted as unemployed.

What trade they should be taught is not clear, however. Ms Averkamp, whose centre provides courses for the young, says she tries to steer the new generation of Duisburgers away from metal-bashing towards the gardening domain. There are still jobs to be had in health care and in retail, and management consultancy is booming.

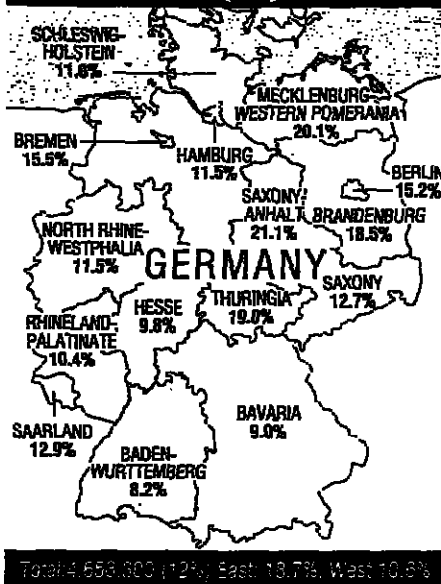

Where a school-leaver's certificate might have sufficed a few years ago, employers now demand more impressive bits of paper — which often count for more in Germany than experience — even for the most menial jobs. Those who cannot keep up face the prospect of permanent unemployment.

Boom over: Coal miners and teenagers lighting torches at an anti-unemployment demonstration in Lünen, near Dortmund, yesterday

Photograph: Reuters

Regional unemployment rates

Unemployment stalks the land

Imre Karacs

It has been a good week on the Frankfurt stock exchange. Investors, cheered by news from the job market and the corresponding plunge in the Deutschmark, poured their money into German companies, matching the post-war record in unemployment with an all-time high for the Dax shares index.

One of the star performers in Frankfurt's bull run was Siemens, a large exporter of German electrical goods and jobs, which announced a leap in profits. Siemens sacked 6,000 workers last year, but wants to raise its return on investments to American levels by the year 2000. To get nearer that goal, the company will fire another 6,000 of its employees by the end of the year.

This is not how things are supposed to be done in Germany, the home of "Rhenish capitalism" which puts the workers' interests first, the boss' second and shareholders' last. The model gave the world the economic miracle and almost unparalleled prosperity, built on harmonious labour relations, a cartel-like economy of cross-ownership, and consensus politics.

The system suited everybody for five decades, but it no longer suits the money-men. An increasing number of German companies, their managers bewitched by Anglo-Saxon phrases, such as "shareholder value" and "globalisation", are forsaking the German model.

The malaise of down-sizing is spreading from the north, cutting across the Ruhr, and its effects can even be felt in the land of the "sunrise industries" in the south. Bavaria and Baden-Württemberg, where the unemployed might have been heading a few years ago on their bikes, both have a higher jobless rate now than Britain.

As for the East, the trillion Deutschmarks invested since unification has failed to create more jobs than Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic achieved without the help of German tax-payers.

There are, of course, many affluent oases on this bleak landscape. Parts of eastern Germany now boast the most modern production methods in the world, which in years to come will pay rich dividends. The chemical sector in the West is booming, there are jobs galore in biotechnology and computing, and car manufacturers are conquering new markets and holding their own at home.

But those that remain successful have done so by shedding labour, often in the teeth of resistance from unions and politicians. Volkswagen started from scratch in eastern Germany, negotiating wages and work practices that would not be accepted by western unions. Daimler-Benz, the country's largest industrial concern, has sacked tens of thousands of workers on its way towards renewed profitability.

White collar unemployment is still rare, but it is coming. Jobs in the public sector which used to enjoy civil-servant status are increasingly being offered on a contractual basis. There are openings in the service sector. New hotels in eastern Germany are seeking receptionists.

Economists and long-suffering consumers agree that there is scope for improvement. There must be thousands of unemployed hairdressers, yet you cannot get a haircut in most of Germany on Mondays.

Will customer-friendly hairdressers save Germany from ever-higher levels of unemployment? Some experts doubt it. "The trouble is that jobs are simply disappearing faster than they are being created in services," says Peter Frieburg of Duisburg's labour exchange. But at least there are bound to be new opportunities in the leisure industry.

To PROVE our exerciser is the BEST in the world:

The Facts.

Some home exercisers promise the world, but few actually deliver when it comes to proven facts and desired figures.

The plain fact is, our exercisers have been thoroughly tried and tested to give you guaranteed and unbeatable results.

NordicTrack has been producing hand crafted ski exercisers for over 20 years and we now have 4 million satisfied customers worldwide.

- NordicTrack skiers accurately simulate cross country skiing, proven to be the most effective aerobic exercise in the world.
- NordicTrack skiers burn up to 890 calories per hour.
- NordicTrack skiers have a smooth, non-jarring action that protects your joints, ligaments, knees, back and hips.
- NordicTrack skiers produce visible results in just three 20 minute sessions a week.
- NordicTrack skiers provide a total-body workout, exercising all major muscle groups.
- NordicTrack skiers help to lower blood pressure, maintain healthy cholesterol levels, minimise stress and improve energy levels.

With facts like these there is no need to consider any other exerciser. Try out a NordicTrack skier at home for 30 days first, if the results don't impress you, we'll refund your money.

Call now for details of your nearest Retail Location or to request your free brochure and video.

* Offer applies to all orders placed before 28.2.97

The Figures.

0800 616179

Sat 9am-5pm, Sun 10am-5pm, Mon-Fri 8am-8.30pm.
PLEASE QUOTE REFERENCE 1A1B7

Yes, I would like to know more about the world's best aerobic exercisers. Please send my free video ☐ and brochure ☐ without obligation.

Name: (Mr/Mrs/Miss/Ms)

Address:

County:

Postcode:

Tel.(Day):

Tel.(Eve):

Send to: NordicTrack (UK) Ltd, Dept 1A1B7, FREEPOST
CV2617, NUNEATON CV34 6BL. No stamp is required.
Alternatively you can fax us on 01926 470 811.

NordicTrack
THE WORLD'S BEST AEROBIC EXERCISERS

CHECKOUT THE SAVINGS

CANON FC230 COMPACT COPIER (Code 203-827)

- 4 copies per min. ● Multi-sheet feed
- Moving copy board
- Up to 50 sheet paper tray capacity
- 12 months on-site warranty

£299.99 57% off

(PREV. PRICE £354.50) RRP £350.13

NEW LOWER PRICE

A4 PUNCHED POCKETS (Code 042-090)

● Pack of 100

NEW LOWER PRICE

£1.25 74% off

(PREV. PRICE £4.75) RRP £4.99

SPECIAL PURCHASE COPIER PAPER (Code 015-317)

● White ● A4

LIMITED OFFER

STILL ONLY

£9.95

5 REAMS

SAMSUNG SF100 COMPACT FAX SYSTEM (Code 204-406)

● LCD display

● 5 one-touch memories

● Telephone/answering interface

● 12 months warranty

NEW LOWER PRICE

£169.99 29% off

(PREV. PRICE £239.99) RRP £240.01

PHONE OR FAX YOUR ORDER DIRECT

FREEPHONE 0800 5000 24

51 SUPERSTORES NATIONWIDE

Open 8am-8pm Monday to Friday, 9am-6pm Sat, 10.30am-4.30pm Sun

Office World

The No 1 Office Supplies Discount Superstore

There's always more % off at Office World

All previous prices quoted were changed at all Office World Superstores open as of 22nd January 1997 and for a period of 28 days to the end of 1997. All products subject to availability. *Free post the following day on orders over £25.00 net (VAT at 10%) in England, Scotland and Wales, excluding Northern Ireland. Please allow 3 days for delivery. **The Office World 'No Quibble Double the Difference Refund' does not apply to refunds to non-members. Member Office World Superstores and Home Office Stores. (Promotion valid until 31st March 1997 or until the first full business day after the end of the promotion.)

سكزا من الامم

French make busiest piste a private function

An eerie silence has fallen upon our apartment building, and the streets outside. The lift, previously as elusive as a waiter in a crowded café, remains obediently where you leave it for as much as 30 minutes at a time.

There are parking spaces on the street; there are empty lunch tables in restaurants as late as 12.45pm. The extremely noisy family in the flat below no longer complains to the gardienne about the noise made by our children running on the parquet floor.

It is, in short, the official Parisian two-week winter holiday. Not quite le tout Paris, but a sizable part of it, has departed to the slopes, or to their second residence, or to their in-laws "in the provinces".

The great summer escape from the capital is well known. It is a mark of shame for a Parisian of any means or social standing to be found in Paris in August, when the city is invaded by foreign tourists. The vacances d'hiver, starting only four weeks after the Christmas-New Year holidays finish, are not so rigorously observed but they are another of those mass events the French love, and love to complain about.

Peasant farmers in the Ardèche and the unemployed in the Pas de Calais will not be taking their skis to the Alps, or going to their residences secondaires. But, like it or not, their children are off school for two weeks and in some cases, receiving free, or cheap, ski holidays, subsidised by the state. The school calendar for the entire country is designed, it seems, to suit the regimented social life cycle of the French bourgeoisie. But the school calendar, fixed nationally three years in advance, then becomes a kind of tyranny, which makes life even more regimented than is comfortable, or even tolerable. The whole situation is rather typiquement français: logical planning to solve one problem causes a much worse problem.

The fashionable time to go skiing is in February because the French will not ski anywhere but in France and the best French skiing is reckoned to be in February. Since five weeks paid holiday is now the legal norm in France (more than any country except Germany), a two-week winter, or ski, break has been built into the school year.

PARIS DAYS

Only a small minority of the French go skiing – just over 8 per cent. But since they all go at once, this means 5 million pairs of skis hit the slopes at the same. This makes for very crowded slopes.

Even if they do not go skiing, many other French people, almost one in three, go on holiday at this time, because the schools are closed. Very few (about 5 per cent) venture outside France. Mostly, they go to second homes or to relatives and friends in the country.

“A penchant for formation living is matched by an extreme attachment to privacy”

More than any other European country, the French spend all their holidays at home. This is a symptom of French insularity, if you like. But France is also the most popular holiday destination in the world. If this country, which has mountains, sunshine, good food, history, culture and unspoiled countryside, is popular with foreigners, why should it not also be popular with the French?

Bénédicte, who lives two floors below us and is the only neighbour to have befriended us, cheerfully sums up her existence: "Paris is for school. As soon as there is no school we go into the provinces." Whenever her husband can, he goes too. Otherwise, every weekend and school-holiday, Bénédicte packs up the car and the children and sets off to her mother-in-law's house in the Auvergne.

The French penchant for formation living is matched by an extreme attachment to privacy. Package tours are unpopular. At holiday time, they go off en masse to live very private lives.

The Ministry of Education decided three years ago that the timing of the winter holidays was causing a problem. The departure of tens of thousands of families to the slopes, or the countryside, when tens of thousands of others were making their normal weekend pilgrimages, was causing vast traffic jams on the autoroutes out of Paris and on the narrow roads leading to the best ski resorts.

Hence, a Cartesian solution was devised: start the school holidays on a Wednesday and end them on a Wednesday, to avoid big jams at the weekends. This year school in Paris ended at Wednesday lunchtime on 5 February and resumes next Wednesday morning on 19 February. Unfortunately, it occurred to no one that few parents would be allowed to start their holidays from work on a Wednesday. Also, no steps were taken to persuade the ski resorts to shift from the Saturday-to-Saturday pattern of letting everything from skis to boots to chalets. As a result, many people have been forced to squish two-week ski holidays into one, making the slopes even more crowded and threatening almighty jams on the roads today and tomorrow. Instead of next weekend. The ski resorts complain they are losing business.

Today has been declared a "samedi rouge" by Bison Futé, the absurd cartoon Native American who is the symbol of road safety in France. It will be, in other words, a day of vast jams and maximum aggravation.

The noisy people in the flat below (who have never spoken to us but always complain through the gardienne) will be in a rare old mood when they get home. It may be a good time to book home clog-dancing courses for the children.

John Lichfield

Mayor in fraud probe

John Lichfield
Paris

The Mayor of Paris, a close ally of both the French President and Prime Minister, is under investigation for embezzlement of public funds three years ago, according to the magazine Le Point.

Jean Tiberi – whose wife is already being investigated by magistrates for the same affair – will receive a letter placing him under formal examination in the next few days, according to the magazine. The mayor, who was deputy mayor under Jacques Chirac at the time of the alleged wrongdoing, rejected Le Point's account yesterday as "the propagation of false information".

He said he would take legal action against the magazine.

His wife, Xavière, is accused of having received 200,000 francs (£22,000) in a sweetheart deal with a local council in the Paris region in 1994. Mrs Tiberi received the money for drawing up an allegedly pointless report on links between French local government and former French colonies in Africa.

According to the satirical and investigative weekly Le Canard Enchaîné, the report was mostly plagiarised by a researcher from published sources and was, in any case, of no practical use to the département of the Essonne.

Le Point reports in its edition published today that the two magistrates examining the payments have discovered that the money was placed in a bank account held jointly in the names of both Mr and Mrs Tiberi.

Last December the chairman of the Essonne council, Xavier Dugoin, directly implicated Mr Tiberi in the affair. He said he was seeking access to the "network of contacts" of the then Number Two in the Paris town hall. He had several conversations with Mr Tiberi in which it was agreed how he would engage the services of Mrs Tiberi and how she would be paid.

The affair is potentially seriously damaging for President Jacques Chirac and the Prime Minister, Alain Juppé.

MUKUNA
A WHITE BOY IN AFRICA

'A book that goes to the heart of the white experience in the long death-throes of Rhodesia'
The Times

'Marvellous'
William Boyd
Sunday Times

PETER GODWIN
WINNER OF THE ESQUIRE/WATERSTONE'S NON-FICTION AWARD
NOW IN PAPERBACK

PICADOR

It's snow good: The French ski in February, because they will not ski anywhere but in France and believe the snow is best in February Photograph: Peter Macdarmid

significant shorts

UN staff accused of child abuse in Angola

Angola's Justice Minister, Paulo Tjipilica accused United Nations personnel and foreign aid workers in Angola of sexually exploiting children. "Aside from Angolan citizens there are foreigners involved, some who work for Unavem (UN Angola Verification Mission) and others who work with aid groups." A UN spokesman said a committee had been set up to investigate the allegations. Reuter - Luanda

Under-age labour offside

Sporting goods companies including Nike and Reebok are joining a campaign to halt football production by Pakistani children. As many as 10,000 children under 14 spend 10 hours a day stitching the balls for a pittance. Last summer the US government began a campaign to discourage Americans from buying child-made balls. AP - New York

37,000 mercy killings

An estimated 37,000 euthanasia deaths occur each year in Australia as a result of doctors intentionally accelerating a patient's death, according to a survey of 3,000 doctors. Euthanasia is illegal in Australia except in the outback Northern Territory which introduced the world's first voluntary euthanasia law last September. Three people have used the law, which the Australian parliament threatens to overturn. Reuter - Sydney

Scientists sue Kohl

Three Scientists have taken Chancellor Helmut Kohl's party to court for expelling them as members. A civil lawsuit filed in Bonn accuses Christian Democratic Union of violating national laws and international conventions on human and political rights. The CDU ousted the three in December because they are Scientologists. AP - Bonn

Sharif named as PM

The Pakistan Muslim League (PML), which won general elections on 3 February, named its leader, Nawaz Sharif, as prime minister. A meeting of the parliamentary group of the PML and its allies unanimously elected Mr Sharif as their parliamentary leader. He will be formally elected prime minister on Monday. Reuter - Islamabad

Uighur plea for help

Uighur organisations appealed to the UN and Central Asian leaders for help stopping what they called China's armed suppression of their people. China admitted clashes last week between Uighurs and ethnic Chinese in Yining left 10 people dead. But Kakhman Khozhamberdi, leader of the United Association of Uighurs, said the death-toll was between 80 and 90 people. AP - Almaty

You're onto a winner with a C&G
mortgage.

Receive up to £7,500 as a cash gift
No valuation fee
No mortgage indemnity premium
No strings

"The best value mortgages over the last five years from any major high street lender"

WHAT MORTGAGE - TOP LENDERS' AWARDS 1996

Our award winning performance makes a C&G Cash
Gift Mortgage a real winner.

If you're moving house and have a personal deposit of 25% or more you'll receive a valuable lump sum equal to 3% of the amount you borrow, up to a maximum of £7,500.

If your deposit is between 5% and 25% or you are switching your existing mortgage to C&G, your cash gift will be 2% of your loan up to a maximum of £4,000.

With C&G you don't pay a valuation fee or mortgage indemnity premium and we don't insist you buy our insurances or take out a mortgage-related investment plan.

Visit your nearest C&G or Lloyds Bank branch or call us today and judge our award winning mortgages for yourself.

"C&G wins top marks for all aspects of its mortgage service"

FINANCIAL ADVISER - SERVICE AWARDS 1996

CALL US NOW. RING FREE ON
0800 272 131
www.cheltglos.co.uk

C&G

Cheltenham & Gloucester

We're run to make you richer

Call in at Lloyds Bank for a C&G mortgage.

Typical example assumes an interest rate of 7.22% and an interest only loan of £50,000 secured over 25 years and a purchase price of £70,000; 100 monthly payments of £273.75 net of tax at 15%. Administration charge £120 (new borrowers only). The original £50,000 must be repaid at the end of the mortgage term. Total amount payable £46,207.57 including our closing redemption administration charge of £40. APR 7.22% (variable). You must be at least 18 years old to apply for a loan. Please ask us if you would like a written quotation. Before agreeing a loan we will normally value the property and will assess your ability to meet the repayments. Any loan will require security in the form of a mortgage over the property. Interest rates may vary during the period of the loan. What Mortgage - Top Lenders' Awards 1996: In a survey of over 1,000 independent financial advisers, C&G ranked first of the 35 lenders voted for. The categories included speed of processing, communication, feedback, product knowledge, professionalism, reliability and flexibility. "No strings" means we don't sell mortgage-related investment plans or insist you buy our insurances. The Cash Gift Mortgage is a C&G standard variable mortgage rate. The cash gift must be repaid if, within five years, you redeem the mortgage or convert it to another C&G mortgage other than at our standard variable mortgage rate (excluding Cash Gift and any special offers available at the time). If the loan is partly redeemed, the cash gift must be repaid on a proportional basis. To help us maintain our service standards, we may record or monitor telephone calls.

Cheltenham & Gloucester plc Barnett Way Gloucester GL4 3RL

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT

هَذَا مِنْ الْأَصْلِ

international

Martin Luther King's family demand trial

Rupert Cornwell
Washington

After almost three decades of silence, the family of Martin Luther King is reopening one of the most traumatic events in modern American history, by demanding a full-scale trial of the man who was convicted of the 1968 murder of the leader of the United States' civil rights movement.

Flanked by his mother, Coretta Scott King, Dexter King told a press conference in his father's home town of Atlanta that the family would make a formal petition next week for a court trial of James Earl Ray, who is dying of liver disease in a Tennessee prison hospital. "It's now or never," Dexter King said. "Only a duly conducted trial can shed light on my father's assassination."

In many respects, the King case resembles the controversy which still surrounds the assassination of President Kennedy, that other national tragedy of the Sixties. As with Lee Harvey Oswald in Dallas, forensic evidence is overwhelming that

Ray fired the single rifle shot which killed Dr King on a motel balcony in Memphis, Tennessee.

But, exactly as with JFK, conspiracy theories rage. In part, these reflect a similar refusal to

Ray is dying of liver disease. It's now or never. Only a full trial can shed light on my father's assassination

James Earl Ray: Dying of cirrhosis in prison admit that a random act by one obscure individual acting alone could change history. But doubts of the official version of events are reinforced by the known observation of the then director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation,

J. Edgar Hoover, with Dr King and the supposed threat he represented to US social stability. In short, was Ray given a helping hand from above?

After the murder on 4 April, as protest rioting swept the avoid the death penalty, he pleaded guilty and was given a 99-year jail sentence. But hardly had he been sentenced than Ray recanted his confession and demanded a proper trial. Even though a congressional committee in 1979 found the "likelihood but no proof" of a conspiracy, Ray's request has seven times been turned down, and prosecutors insist that no new facts justify a reopening of the case. But his illness (he has acute liver cirrhosis and without a transplant is given less than a year to live) and the intervention of the King family may tip the scales.

Ray himself, now 68, insists that he did not commit the crime, and his lawyers claim technology developed since his 1969 conviction could show that his 30-calibre hunting rifle was not the murder weapon. But the biggest mystery is how Ray, a small-time burglar on the run at the time of the assassination, obtained the money, air tickets and four fake identities which helped him evade capture for two months.

"The FBI kept my father under closer surveillance than any man in history, even more than Al Capone. There were 5,000 men on him," Dexter King claims. "How was a man with only an eighth-grade education, who was an escapee from prison with very little money, able to get a passport and travel to three countries?"

A trial, he acknowledges, might not completely clear up the mystery, but it would give the family "peace of mind". The truth had to be established, and "we feel strongly this can only be done in a court of law".

Among the most common theories is that Ray was set up by the Mafia, acting on behalf of the FBI or the CIA, and that he handed his gun to a man who said he was part of a gun-running scheme. The aim of the alleged plot was to prevent Dr King leading a planned march on Washington that, the authorities feared, could spark a national black uprising. In fact, his assassination led to the worst race riots in the city's history.

Ray has frequently changed his story of his actions in the 24 hours up to the assassination. But it is known that he bought the rifle in March 1968, and had followed Dr King to at least two cities before he arrived in Memphis to rally striking refuse workers. He died on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel, which has since been turned into America's first civil rights museum.

Yesterday Ray's family also supported a trial. "I'm sure the whole King family, like the whole Ray family and the rest of the American public, wants the truth to come out, once and for all," his brother Jerry Ray said.

Demand for justice: Dexter King, son of assassinated civil rights leader Martin Luther King (picture in background), at a press conference on Thursday. Photograph: AP

Bosnian town left in tense limbo

Tony Barber
Europe Editor

The north Bosnian town of Brcko, a focus of tension among Serbs, Muslims and Croats, will be placed under international supervision for a year pending a decision on its status, a US arbiter said yesterday. "We will make a final choice no later than March 1998," Roberts Owen told reporters in Rome.

Tension remained too high for Brcko to be awarded to the Bosnian Serbs, the Muslim-Croat federation, or the joint government of Bosnia-Herzegovina, in which all three nationalities are represented. "We are not convinced that any of the three candidates are sufficiently stabilised to take on the situation."

The ruling lessened the danger of an immediate crisis over Brcko, but illustrated the bitterness and suspicion that fester in Bosnia more than a year after the Dayton peace deal was signed. Brcko was the focus of such a fierce contest for control at the Dayton talks that the issue was left unresolved and turned over to an arbitration panel.

Muslim and Croat leaders said it should be awarded to their federation, which occupies 51 per cent of Bosnia, because it had a Muslim and Croat majority before the Serbs seized it in May 1992. The Bosnian Serbs insisted on keeping control because Brcko provides a land link between the two halves of Republika Srpska, the Serb entity occupying 49 per cent of Bosnia.

Some Western officials feared the issue could ultimately cause the entire Dayton peace structure to collapse. When rumours circulated in Sarajevo that Mr Owen intended to award Brcko to the Serbs, the Bosnian Muslim leader, Alija Izetbegovic, threatened to pull out of the three-nation collective Bosnian presidency. "I think that there is no one who could explain to the Bosnian people that it should calmly endure this final injustice," Mr Izetbegovic wrote in a letter to the major world powers. He said political chaos would break out if Brcko were left in Serb hands, because no Muslim politician would agree to serve on the collective presidency.

No less single-minded, the Bosnian Serbs see control of Brcko as an essential guarantee of their republic's survival. They have threatened to go back to war if the Muslims and Croats are awarded the town. Mr Owen said one possible solution was to turn the town into a special district of Bosnia, with a status similar to that of Washington DC in the United States.

However, Brcko is not the only dispute still simmering in Bosnia almost five years after the war broke out.

The southern town of Mostar, split into Croat and Muslim sectors, has in the past week experienced its worst violence since the war ended in November 1995.

The presence of Nato troops is perhaps the main reason why war has not returned to Bosnia, but they are due to leave by mid-1998.

The United States welcomed the mediator's decision to defer the final decision on the status of Brcko.

Clinton fears war in Mid-East

Patrick Cockburn
Jerusalem

Worried that Israel and Syria are sliding towards a war in Lebanon, President Clinton is trying to get the two countries to resume the peace talks broken off a year ago. After talks with Benjamin Netanyahu, the Israeli Prime Minister, in Washington, Mr Clinton said he felt encouraged, but an Israeli official said yesterday that there had been no breakthrough.

The guerrilla war by Hizbollah, the Lebanese Islamic movement, against Israeli forces occupying a nine-mile wide zone in south Lebanon is unlikely to end so long as Israel holds the Golan Heights, which it captured from Syria in 1967, Israel believes. Officials say that President Hafez al-Assad of Syria sees the fighting in Lebanon as an important way of putting pressure on Israel over the Golan.

Mr Netanyahu is quoted in the Israeli press as telling Mr Clinton: "You must make it clear to Assad that he must think of other options - the option of a total withdrawal from the Golan does not exist from our point of view."

Zeev Schiff, an Israeli military commentator, says the US does not want to start talks which would get nowhere. He adds that this is "despite the American belief that in the absence of a peace process, the sides will slide downwards towards war."

Attacks by the Israeli force in Lebanon earlier this week were directed at positions in the Bekaa valley, which is under Syrian control, in order to demonstrate Israeli military superiority in the wake of a series of successful guerrilla attacks and the helicopter accident which killed 73 Israeli troops.

The US opposes a unilateral Israeli pull-out. President Clinton said: "It is crucial Israel protect the security of its northern border. A further impediment to talks with Syria is that President Assad is seriously ill, a US official said.

UNSECURED PERSONAL LOANS

12.9% APR

Could our low rates save you money?

You can take out an unsecured Personal Loan from £500 to £10,000 for any reason* with Hamilton Direct Bank, and take advantage of our attractive fixed rates.

- Your application is usually approved over the phone while you wait
- Money paid into your bank account for extra convenience
- No arrangement fees or hidden charges
- Fixed monthly repayments that are guaranteed not to increase

See how much you can save with Hamilton Direct Bank.

TYPICAL EXAMPLES	A LOAN OF £4,000	A LOAN OF £7,000
	APR*	48 monthly repayments	Total amount payable	WHAT YOU SAVE	APR*	48 monthly repayments	Total amount payable	WHAT YOU SAVE
	15.9%	£109.38	£5,250.24		12.9%	£105.16	£5,087.68
	17.9%	£114.58	£5,499.84		17.9%	£200.49	£9,633.12
	18.9%	£116.33	£5,543.84		16.9%	£197.40	£9,475.20

*The rates quoted are for new customers. Existing customers may be eligible for a different rate. *Rates are correct as at 12/2/97

HAMILTON
Direct Bank
A division of HFC Bank plc

IF YOU ARE 25 OR OVER AND EARN £10,000 PA OR MORE, APPLY NOW ON FREephone

0800 30 3000

Hamilton Direct Bank can be found on Web site: <http://www.hdbi.co.uk> (Loans for business or non-business purposes are excluded. This offer is not available in the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands. A written quotation of our credit terms is available on request. All loans are subject to credit checks. You must be aged 24 years or over and in receipt of a regular income in excess of £10,000 p.a. The minimum loan is £500. If you do not qualify for a loan with Hamilton Direct Bank we may, with your specific permission, only pass your details to other divisions of HFC Bank plc, who may be able to offer you alternative loan products. For your security and to help improve our service to you, we may record or monitor calls to and from Hamilton Direct Bank, a division of HFC Bank plc, an authorized institution under the Banking Act 1987, Registered Office: North Street, Whitefield, Warrington, Cheshire SK4 4TD. Registered in England No. 1117395.

Please send me details on Hamilton Direct Bank and an application form.

Title _____ Initial _____ Surname _____

Address _____

Postcode _____ Td. No. (inc. STD) _____

Codes 93004/046N Please see Hamilton Direct Bank, FREEPOST RT3 1JN, Newcastle, NE1 1BR.

"FANTASTIC BATHROOM OFFERS."

ANTHONY CHAMPNESS
Bathroom Sales Consultant,
B&Q BURY ST EDMUNDS

DORSET SUITE ONLY £299

Dorset Suite
Comprises steel bath, scalloped pottery basin and pedestal, close coupled cistern and toilet, antique pine effect front panel and toilet seat, gold effect bath and basin taps with wastes.
IN STORE TO TAKE AWAY WHILE STOCKS LAST

Barleycorn Suite
Comprises acrylic bath, white or soft cream pottery basin and pedestal, close coupled cistern and toilet, antique pine effect front panel and toilet seat, gold effect bath and basin taps with wastes.

As shown, with bath/shower mixer and basin taps.

Salisbury Suite (not shown)
Comprises acrylic bath, white rope design pottery basin and pedestal, close coupled cistern and toilet, mahogany effect or waxed pine effect front panel and toilet seat, gold effect bath and basin taps with wastes.

As above, but with bath/shower mixer and basin taps.

£100 OFF

WAS £525 NOW £425

WAS £590 NOW £490

WAS £649 NOW £549

WAS £729 NOW £629

Pop into your local B&Q for your copy of the B&Q Bathrooms Brochure.

EARN TESCO CLUBCARD POINTS AT B&Q

Pick up a leaflet in store. Does not apply in B&Q Warehouse or B&Q Depots.

A BIGGER CHOICE • A BETTER PRICE

B&Q

YOU CAN DO IT WHEN YOU B&Q IT!

OPENING HOURS

Mon-Sat: Most stores 9am-6pm. Sunday: Most stores 10am-4pm (where permitted). Scotland & Northern Ireland: 9am-5pm. Certain store hours may vary, please phone your nearest store to confirm. BEST VALUE MONEY BACK GUARANTEE - FOR YOUR NEAREST STORE PHONE 0800 000 000 Internet: <http://www.bq.co.uk> Offers may vary at B&Q Warehouse and B&Q Depots. See in store for details of our Price Promise. All purchases may not be on display but can be ordered from any B&Q. Suite complete items only as shown (and prices available as shown). Offers subject to availability. Please phone to check before travelling.

Civil rights leader Martin Luby on Thursday. Photograph by [unclear]

se limbo

town. Mr Owen said one possibility was to turn the town into a district of Bosnia, with a status similar to that of Washington DC in the United States.

However, Brcko is not the only town still simmering in Bosnia almost two years after the war broke out.

The southern town of Mostar, into Croat and Muslim sectors, in the past week experienced its worst violence since the war ended in November 1995.

The presence of Nato troops helps the main reason why war has returned to Bosnia, but they are due to leave by mid-1998.

The United States welcomed mediator's decision to defer the final decision on the status of Brcko.

LOANS

0 PR

save you money.

Personal Loan from £500 to £10,000. Direct Bank, and take advantage of it.

moved over the phone while you will benefit for extra convenience in charges.

it are guaranteed not to increase with Hamilton Direct Bank.

A LOAN OF £1,000
APR	Monthly Repayment	Total Repayment	Total Interest
12.9%	£105.10	£1,261.20	£261.20
12.9%	£105.10	£1,261.20	£261.20
16.9%	£117.40	£1,408.80	£408.80

Bank and an application form.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

POSTCODE _____

TELEPHONE _____

SIGNATURE _____

DATE _____

DIESEL CAR OF THE YEAR

Awards

1996 DIESEL CAR OF THE YEAR

Rover 220 SDi

... something special to win our top accolade, and ... Forget the diesel aspect for a moment. Here is a car that looks new, fresh and attractive but – and here's the point – manages that effect with classically good lines, not wacky, in-your face styling. When some of this year's other new models look tired and cheap, the 220 will still look good.

The dynamics are just as pleasing as the style. The Rover rides and handles really well, making it a pleasure to drive.

its packaging is ...

– but for plenty of car buyers that won't be a problem. Why pay for acres of space if you seldom need it?

Finally, there's that L-series engine. In its first application, the Power ...

FOR A QUIET CAR,
IT'S MAKING
A LOT OF NOISE.

Call 0345 186 186 to hear even more about it, or contact your local dealer.

Clever boxing by Russia's champion of democracy

Moscow — Grigory Yavlinsky used to be a boxer, but these days he likes to win his bouts with a rhetorical upper-cut, culled from the pages of 20th-century history. "The successful reform of Germany and Japan after the war was prepared by completely changing the political elite. In Russia, that did not happen."

Doubt has long been raised about the politics of the autocratically inclined President Boris Yeltsin, the magnates who underpin his rule and the former apparatchiks who crowd the corridors of government.

Many are assumed in the West to be reformers and democrats, despite evidence that their priorities have less to do with ideology than a desire to retain power.

But Mr Yavlinsky, head of Russia's Yabloko (Apple) party, has impeccable credentials, being leader of what he describes as "a real, federal democratic party of European values, of human values, of human rights, of competition, private property and the open market." That makes him relatively rare in Moscow: a largely pro-Western liberal ideologue. With Mr Yeltsin's second term in intensive care, Mr Yavlinsky has also emerged as one of his most caustic opponents, matching and often outsparring the Communist-nationalist opposition which dominates parliament.

Phil Reeves meets the combative Grigory Yavlinsky

Russia is in the grips of a "semi-criminal oligarchy" which has sprung from and coalesced around the remnants of the Soviet system, he told the Independent. The media is tamed; even the opposition is something of a sham. "The government is working hand-in-hand with the Communists and the nationalists ... They are the main forces which are supporting the government."

The timing of such attacks is no coincidence. Like every one else, the 44-year-old economist senses Russia is preparing for the possibility of a future with a new president, amid a mood that dusk has set on the Yeltsin era. Last week he was on the offensive again, writing in the Financial Times: "The ruling elite is neither democratic nor Communist, neither conservative nor liberal, neither red nor green. It is merely greedy and rapacious."

Given such failings, the leadership is, he warns, unable to cope with new menaces to Russia and the West: loss of control over nuclear weapons, development of a breeding-ground for terrorism and crime, and the "high probability" of an environmental disaster.

He told the Independent: "A very small number of people have benefited from what happened in the last five years, maybe a million out of 158 million. That million is really rich. But all the others ... got no access to resources, access to property, freedom to set up their own business."

Mr Yavlinsky wants Mr Yeltsin's successor to be subject to more checks and balances; there should be no more massive tax breaks issued with a stroke of the pen, no more secret decrees. "We need a system where it would not be possible for the president to have a morning cup of tea, and then to start a war."

Should an election be called, Mr Yavlinsky would run, although he is overshadowed by the front-runners, notably the nationalist-leaning Alexander Lebed and Yuri Luzhkov, Mayor of Moscow.

Yabloko enjoys strong support among the urban educated but Mr Yavlinsky's 10 million supporters are too few to put him high in the field. He could wrinkle a promise of a top position by offering an alliance with whatever candidate the ruling establishment fields under the tattered banner of democracy and reform. But he prefers to remain aloof, an uncompromising democratic voice.

"If we went to the oligarchy, they (the voters) would say 'you are the same. You are only looking for your own'. The people would be disappointed. We have to show that there can be a clean democracy, with clean hands." Fine words. But in a country angered and humiliated by Nato expansion, the loss of the Chechen war, and botched economic reforms, the outlook for liberal ideologies is not great.

Lone voice: Grigory Yavlinsky, who says Russia is in the grips of a 'semi-criminal oligarchy' which has sprung from the remnants of the Soviet system. Photograph: AP

Yeltsin rejects move to rewrite constitution

Phil Reeves
Moscow

In his first radio address to the nation since being stricken with double pneumonia early last month, Boris Yeltsin yesterday tried to stifle rising demands for immediate constitutional amendments spawned by the uncertainty over his long-term future in the Kremlin.

Speaking for six minutes in a clear but slightly croaky voice, the embattled President sought to remind both his friends and foes that although he may be down — he has been off sick for most of the last seven months — he is not yet out.

Significantly, though, he did not dismiss the possibility of eventual changes to Russia's 1993 constitution, in which he secured sweeping powers, saying only that they must follow a "natural process" and not be rushed.

Alarmed by the prospect that he may be too unwell to rule for much longer, Moscow's political establishment has been embroiled in a debate about altering the constitution, partly to ensure that Russia's fate no longer rests so heavily in the hands of one man, and partly to block the favourite for the presidency, Alexander Lebed.

Suggestions have included considerably extending the time that the Prime Minister, Viktor Chernomyrdin, can stand in when the President is ill, a move that would delay the date of an election.

There have also been rumblings about, allowing parliament to appoint the next president, a move that would radically alter the nature of Russia's political system. Both plays would severely damage Mr Lebed's prospects.

Yesterday Mr Yeltsin sought to dampen down what has become a heated issue. "The constitution is the pivot of the new Russian statehood," he said.

"It is premature today to subject the new structure of the Russian state, as it is being built, to a test of its durability. It is more than that — it is folly."

His broadcast came as he secured a small victory — the failure of a symbolic and lacklustre attempt in the Russian parliament's lower house, the Duma, to secure a motion calling on him to step down because of ill health. A truer measure of the President's fitness lies in the days ahead.

Mr Yeltsin's calendar for next week includes a meeting with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and the US Secretary of State, Madeleine Albright.

After that loom even more daunting tests of his strength on which all eyes will rest — a speech to parliament on 6 March, and a summit with President Bill Clinton in Helsinki on 20-21 March.

Sometimes We wonder whether we go too far to secure the IBM Global Network. But then, there's no such thing as 'too secure' when six of the world's largest banks all run their internal networks on it. Particularly when 25,000 other companies — in over 800 cities worldwide — also use us. Nor can it be too efficient. Any company that does business on the Net needs to be sure they can let customers have instant access to their data — or send electronic messages anywhere around the world — both at the highest possible speed and in the strictest confidence. So allow us to reassure you. On our network, your network won't just be fast. It'll be every bit as safe as a bank's.

Because whether 5 million or five people have access to your system, we always use the same technology. No half-measures, no partial solutions. Just complete, vaultlike security, 24 hours a day. If you would like more information please call 0800 675 675 quoting IB2.

IBM

Solutions for a small planet

INSTANT ACCESS
UP TO
6.3%
GROSS R.A.

NOW THERE'S MORE INTEREST IN THE POST

Instant Direct, the new instant access postal account from Alliance & Leicester, offers you outstanding rates of interest. Without penalty.	AMOUNT	GROSS R.A.	NET R.A.
	$100,000 +	6.30%	5.04%
	$50,000 - $99,999	6.15%	4.92%
	$25,000 - $49,999	6.10%	4.88%
	$10,000 - $24,999	6.05%	4.84%
	$5,000 - $9,999	5.55%	4.44%

And you don't have to go any further than your nearest post box.

FOR AN INFORMATION PACK
CALL LOCAL RATE
0645 22 88 58

ALLIANCE & LEICESTER
INSTANT DIRECT

Information provided over the telephone will be used to advise you of details of any products and services which the Society thinks may be of interest to you. If you prefer not to receive such details, please let the Society know. Interest rates are variable. Interest will be payable net of Income Tax at the rate determined by the Inland Revenue, from time to time (currently 30%), or subject to the required registration gross interest is paid annually or monthly as requested. For investments made by cheque, interest is calculated from the fourth banking day following receipt, up to and including the day before withdrawal. Minimum age 18. Only available to UK residents. Minimum opening investment £5,000. Full terms and conditions available on request. Alliance & Leicester Building Society, Postal Investments Centre, PO Box 476, 125 - 128 Vaughan Way, Leicester LE1 4ZL. January 1997

152 من الامارات

in the grips of a 'semi-crisis' of the Soviet system. Photographs in rejects to rewrite institution

when the President is... move that would delay the of an election.

There have also been... blings about allowing... ment to appoint the... president, a move that... radically alter the... Russia's political system... plays would severely... Mr Lebed's prospects.

Yesterday Mr Yeltsin... to dampen down what... come a heated issue. "The... stitution is the pivot of... Russian statehood," he... "It is premature today... subject the new structure... Russian state, as it is... to a test of its durability... more than that - it is... His broadest came as... cured a small victory -... ure of a symbolic and... attempt in the Russian... ment's lower house, the... to secure a motion call... him to step down beca... health. A truer measure... President's fitness lies... days ahead.

Mr Yeltsin's calendar... next week includes a... with Palestinian leader... Arafat and the US Sec... State, Madeleine Albri... After that loom even... daunting tests of his... which all eyes will... speech to parliament... March, and a summit... ident Bill Clinton in... 20-21 March.

IMAGE OF THE WEEK MPs took a breather from the pre-election squalls this week with the 10th annual exhibition of the Parliamentary Photographic Group sponsored by Kodak. Labour's Ann Taylor found inspiration from the countryside near Holmfirth, Yorkshire, with 'Storm Brewing'. Picture taken with a Canon IXUS Advanced Photosystem camera, using Kodak Advantix 200 ASA film set on automatic, but using fill in flash

the long weekend

THE INDEPENDENT • SATURDAY 15 FEBRUARY 1997

WORDS OF THE WEEK

My very dear Sam

As I have here two or three little matters in your note of yesterday which rather puzzled me, I thought I must write and ask an explanation. In the first place, in what does Bella sometimes now pain Sam just a little?

Why does he not wish to be near her? Secondly, what right has he to conjure up in his fertile imagination any such nasty things as rough corners to smooth down, when there is one who loves him better and more fondly than ever one behind did another on this earth at least. Oh Sam I think it is so wrong of you to fancy such dreadful things.

I must certainly say I have always looked up to, and respected, both parents and perhaps have been too mindful of what they say (I mean respecting certain matters), but then in a very short time you will have the entire inmanagement of me and I can assure you that you will find in me a most docile and yielding pupil. Pray don't imagine when I am yours - that things will continue the same as they are now. God forbid. Better would it be to put an end to this matter altogether if we thought there was the slightest probability of that, so pray don't tremble for our future happiness. I could not sleep without writing you, so you must excuse this nonsense. Good night, my precious pet, may angels guard and watch over you and give you pleasant dreams, not drab colours and accept the fondest and most sincere love of,

Your devoted,
BELLA MAYSON
Burn this as soon as perused.

My dearly beloved Sam

I take advantage of this after dinner opportunity to enjoy myself and have a small chat with you on paper although I have really nothing to say, and looking at it in a mercenary point of view my letter will not be worth the postage. I am so continually thinking of you that it seems to do me

Sotheby's, the London auction house, is to hold a sale of the love letters between 20-year-old Isabella Mayson, later known as the Victorian cook Mrs Beeton, left, and her beau, Samuel. The correspondence was written before their marriage in 1856 a vast amount of good even to do a little black and white business, knowing very well that a few lines of nonsense are always acceptable to a certain mutable gentleman be they ever so short or stupid.

Accept my best love and think of me only as, Yours affectionately, lovingly and truly
BELLA MAYSON

I am looking forward with great pleasure to that evening at the Opera, that is to say if we go by ourselves; rather a bold expression for a maiden of twenty.

1000000 kisses. Good bye, my darling.

Epsom
June 16th 1856

My very dear Sam,

I have just returned from Brighton and hasten to write you a few lines just to give you a short account of my trip to Brighton.

In the first place I was very much disappointed at your not coming on Saturday evening. I waited and looked out anxiously for you but no Sam did I see to gladden my eyes. Naughty and very cruel of you to serve me so to serve me so, as Polly Hopkins says. We arrived about noon at Brighton and immediately went shopping for the small children to appear at our wedding in something more than usual.

We shall not be in Town till Thursday when I hope to see you. Could you not run down to-morrow evening to see me. It seems such an age since I have spoken with you and I can assure you I quite long for a quiet little chat with my old man, my dear darling venerable.

London Bouverie
Sunday Eveg 9 o'clock

My dearest Bella,

As I have been completely sold to-day, and am feeling horribly blue, wretchedly cobalt, disagreeably desolate, I am going to wreak my miserableness on you, and bother you about a lot of things of which I have been thinking.

First of all, by some misunderstanding, Mr Hegarty didn't dine with us to-day and consequently I had not even the satisfaction of being able to say unto myself Well, if you would have preferred being with Bella, still you are doing your duty in paying all the respect you can unto a good fellow, and most valued friend of your Father's - you see I couldn't even gammon myself with that small specific, so I ate my dinner with the best grace possible, potted everybody, was surly to all, and escaped to my den in Bouverie - have written a multitude of people on different matters, looked at Ledgers, Cash books, Cheque books, etc., and, after all this dreadful wickedness, complete the scene by annoying you.

I commenced the day badly I fear, for I was violating the Sabbath by violetting in the field and roads, this morning, round Finner.

London, Bouverie
Friday aftn.

My dearest Bella

How shall I thank you enough for your kind note - in what way can I pour forth my appreciation of your thoughtfulness and goodness in writing to me in so fond a manner? I give up the sweet talk in despair, for if one were to search out the most telling words of gratitude from all the vocabularies, written and unwritten, of all the nations - the mystic Chaldean the classic Latin, the pure Greek, the rare Hindostanee, the trenchant Saxon, the modern French, the mellifluous Italian - yet would all these fall far short of expressing that sentiment of thankfulness which I so strongly feel. The pleasure I derived from your letter, too, was heightened by the knowledge that my friend Fred likewise received an epistle from Brighton so, knowing how much I prized your fondly written lines, I could estimate his gratification of the receipt of his epistle.

The Beeton letters and a large collection of cookery books will be auctioned at Sotheby's on 10 April. For details phone: Polly Baynton-Coward 0171-408 5301.

Last week we inadvertently reported that the Radio 4 play 'Spoonface Steinberg' was to be repeated on February 4. It is, in fact, to be broadcast again on February 22 after an unprecedented demand for the repeat. We are sorry that we did not credit Lee Hall as the author of the piece. Lee Hall's first play, 'I Love You Jimmy Spud', is to be filmed this summer.

INSIDE

John Walsh meets Jane Birkin

... and finds she wants to be a hit in her home country page 3

Byron: the poet as pop star

Sex, scandal and the roles the writer played page 7

PLUS

Games, crossword	2
Arts	4&5
Books	6,7,8
Travel	9,10
Skiing	12,13
Outings	15
Country, gardening	16,17
Shopping	18-19
Motoring	20
HOMES &amp; MONEY
Property	21,22
PEPS special	26-30
TV, radio reviews	31

INSTANT ACCESS

5.3%

THERE'S MORE BEST IN THE POST

ALLIANCE & LEICESTER INSTANT DIRECT

LOCAL RATE 22 88 58

smartarse

THE ONLY COMFORTABLE ECONOMY CLASS SEAT IN THE AIR

At Air New Zealand we aim to pamper every part of you. From top to, er, bottom. That's why our new Pacific Class seat boasts the most advanced features of any long-haul economy class seat in the air. A seat bottom and back cushion that move together to rock the body into a relaxed position. An adjustable footrest and extendable 'wing' headrests. More space. More support all round. So you can rest assured you'll have a surprisingly comfortable flight. And that's the bottom line. For our complimentary information pack call 0500 444 747 FREE.

As endorsed by "Open Ergonomics"

AIR NEW ZEALAND

A flavour of oriental OXO

A noughts and crosses puzzle caught on camera: noughts to play and win

If we ever make contact with beings from another galaxy, it would be very surprising to discover that they played chess, bridge or backgammon. The rules are too intricate and arbitrary to expect them to have evolved independently among a different intelligence. They might just play a form of Go, though probably not on our 19 by 19 boards. What they would almost certainly do, however – if they have discovered the joys of games at all – is to play some version of Noughts and Crosses. The idea of making connected lines of symbols on a square grid is so natural, they must surely do it everywhere in the universe.

They would know, of course, that the traditional three-by-three game always ends in a draw if the players know what they are doing. (Unlike the opponent of the little girl in the picture, who has already gone fatally wrong. She has only to put her Nought in the centre now, and she will win in a couple more moves.) Our aliens might also have discovered – if their gravity is strong enough to support the game at all – that Connect-4 (in which pieces must drop to the lowest available point in vertical lines on a seven-by-seven grid) is a win for the player who goes first. (Though it took a good computer program to find the strategy leading by force to a winning line of four in a row.) But where would our alien friends stand on the game of five-in-a-row, also known as Go-Moku or, in its more refined form, Renju?

In its casual form, the game is played on sheets of graph paper, just like an extended game of noughts-and-crosses, and the winner is the first to make five in a row. There is some evidence that such a game existed in China around 4,000 years ago, though the Ancient Greeks and pre-Columbian Americans seem also to have discovered it independently.

The game took a more formal shape around 700AD, when it began to be played in Japan with black and white stones on a Go board. It was not until towards the end of the 19th century, however, that books began to appear on the theory of the game. At around the same time, a general suspicion appeared to emerge that the player who moved first had too much of an advantage. More recently, thanks to the availability of computer analysis, it has been proved that there is a forced win for the player who starts, and that is where the history of the game becomes most interesting.

There are two options when you discover that a popular and challenging game has a basic fault: you can throw it away, or you can change the rules. Most of the world – including Britain – seems to have opted for the former solution. Five-in-a-row is still played here by school-children who have moved beyond old-fashioned noughts-and-crosses, but no form of it ever seems to have been taken seriously enough for formal competitions to have been instigated.

William Hartston discovers the thinking man's noughts and crosses

In Japan and some other countries, however, they repaired the game well enough for it to take its place alongside the traditional boardgames of Go and Shogi (Japanese chess). The rule-changes were made in 1899, when the name of the formal game was changed to Renju – which means “string of five pearls” in Japanese.

The new rules form a set of restrictions on types of move that the players are allowed to make. For example, the simplest way to ensure that you will form a line of five in a row is to form a row of four, open at both ends: -0000-. Your opponent cannot block both threats simultaneously. And the simplest way to ensure that you will be able to form such a row of four is to form two distinct open-ended rows of three (in different directions) with a single move. The new rules specified a 15 by 15 board and banned such “double-three” formations. They also banned “double-fours” and “overlines” (lines of more than five in a row), and anyone making such a formation would lose the game instantly. This introduced a new possibility to win a game by creating a threat that could only be met by making one of the proscribed patterns.

The new game of Renju was rapidly seen as more than just a repair of the traditional Go-moku. It was a game of strategy in its own right. And its champions quickly became respected alongside those of other traditional Japanese board games. In the novel “The Master of Go” by Yasunari Kawabata (available in the Penguin Modern Classics series) there is an account of an exclusive gathering at the opening ceremony of the 1938 world Go championship match: “All told, four masters were in the assembly: on Shusa’s left, Sekine, thirteenth in the line of Grand Masters of Shogi, as well as Kimura, Master of Shogi, and Takagi, Master of Renju, all brought together for this, the commencement of the Master’s last match.”

The game, however, has been slow to spread beyond Japan. The International Renju Federation was formed in 1988 and international tournaments are now held in Japan, Sweden, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Latvia and Russia. According to the current rating list, the world’s top twenty players include 12 Japanese, four Russians, two Latvians and two Estonians.

But why has Renju never become popular in England? Surely it is just the sort of game to appeal to our large population of game-players. I suspect the answer is as simple as the game itself. One can get away with playing bridge because it is a team game and therefore ostensibly sociable. Backgammon and poker players are admired for their ability to gamble without flinching. One can now (thanks to the efforts of Nigel Short) describe oneself as a chessplayer without inviting looks of pity. But Renju? Deep down, games players like to be taken seriously. Noughts and crosses is a step far.

Games people play

Pandora Melly discovers soccer therapy.

Edward Under-Pole, 38, actor and Crystal Maze master.

Let me tell you, the game I like playing is football with my mates. Now you might think that’s highly unlikely, because at school I was the cliché weed, but I’ve got a photograph to show you: me and a couple of the team taken by myself when we’d just finished playing in last week in Regent’s Park.

I learnt to play football in 1989 because I was suffering from a broken heart – a badly broken heart – and some chums said “come and play football”.

It takes me back to when I did my first ever gig with a band, I was looking forward to it because I thought I was so mercurial, and I can tell you that before the end of the first song I wanted to stop because I was absolutely exhausted. So I started to go running so I’d be a bit fitter. When you run, it hurts at first, then you get this terrific rush from the endorphins. That was 1978.

Let’s go forward, back to the broken heart.

Some of these football chums were quite rough, and we played on concrete. They knew I was sad because I’d been deserted, but they never talked about it, they just played football with me and it was as though someone was putting their arms around me very comfortably. All that summer we played football and got increasingly fit; each of us thrumming with endorphins.

But this is the crux: if you invite someone to play, they reveal everything about their character. You sometimes think, “Hey, well, I don’t like this fellow.” Some people play like professionals, you know, jostling and fouling and such. After about a year of this, I was much comforted and started to get better. I put it all down to football.

Premier League footballers use the Mitre Ultimac professional standard matchball, £49.99 from Lillywhites (0171-915-4000).

Don’t junk it... use it

From lager can to curved picture frame

This design is a cheap and cheerful way to create frames for those pictures that don’t quite deserve the expense of buying one ready-made. All you need is an empty lager can, some pieces of cardboard, heavy-duty scissors and some string (ideally elastic) and toggles.

As a handy tip, I can recommend starting with a full lager can. It helps get you into the right mood. First empty the lager can. Then, using a heavy pair of scissors, cut off the top and bottom and cut down the centre.

Flatten out the rectangle of metal you have just created. Measure the margins to the required size, and cut out the centre section. Use a pair of pliers to fold and crimp the edges flat. Quite apart from giving the frame a more finished look, this avoids the danger of cutting yourself on sharp edges.

Cut two pieces of cardboard slightly smaller than the frame, then punch holes in the corners of cardboard and frame. String together with elastic string and toggles, or use ribbon or plain string. By pulling the string tight, you can give the frame an original curved shape which also helps it to stand up on its own.

(Which may be more than you can manage yourself, if the first few lagers can refuse to cooperate with your intentions.) Finally, if still sober, you can decorate the finished frame by tapping or scribing designs onto it.

Bawn O’Beime-Ranelagh

The games page is edited by William Hartston

Chess William Hartston

Devilants take note: on 4 January in Hastings, the British Chess Variants Society was formed and a new respectability was created for the previously disorganised world of deviant forms of chess.

The various fields of interest of the new society are well illustrated in its own journal “Variant Chess” which appears four times a year (subscription £8.00). The current issue contains articles on Losing Chess, where the object is to lose all your pieces, where the rules specify mandatory capturing. Cylinder Chess, where you play on a normal board but imagine it wound round into a cylinder with the a-file and h-file joined, and Progressive Chess in which White plays one move, then Black two, White three and so on. No checks allowed before the final move of any.

Like most chess fanatics, I had played all these versions when I was at school, but never realised how much they had been analysed and developed as valid forms of the game. Here are some examples of the sort of things deviancy can offer that straight chess cannot. First, a game of Losing Chess won by a computer program.

White: IZNOGOU
Black: R Salvadori
1 c3 b5 2 Bxb5 c6 3 Bxc6 Nxc6 4 b4 Nxb4 5 a4 Nxc2 6 Qxc2 Qc7? (the losing move!) 7 Qxc7 Rb8 8 Qxd7 Rb1 9 Rxb1 Kxd7 10 Rb7 and Black resigned because of 10...Bxb7 11.Kc2 Bxc2 12.Bb2 Bxb1 13.Bxc7 Bxc7 14.c4 Bxc4 15.d4 Bxd4 16.Kd2 Bf2 17.Nf3 Bxf3 18.Kd1 Bxd1 19.h3 Bxa4 20.h4.

Apparently, 1.e3 is thought to be the best opening move (all other moves of central pawns have been shown to lead to a forced loss), though 1.b3, 1.b4, 1.g3 and 1.g4 are also well considered.

For real deviation, however, I can recommend Progressive Cylinder Chess. Try this game – remember, the number of moves per player goes up by one each time, and the edges of the boards are joined so, for example, the f1-h3 diagonal continues along a4 to e8.

White: G Cornacchini
Black: G P Jelliss
1 g4 2 g5. Bxd2+; (the bishop emerges seamlessly from h6 to a5 and continues on its way) 3 Bxd2. Bc4. Bxf7+; 4 Kxf7, Nf6, Ne4, Nxd2; 5 Qxd2, Qxd7, Qxc8, Qxd8, Kd2; 6 h5, hxc4, g3, gx2, fxc1=Q, Rxd8+; 7 Kc3, Na3, Nb5, Nxc7, Raxg1, Rf1 mate.

For further information about the British Chess Variants Society, contact GP Jelliss, Top Floor, 63 Eversfield Place, St Leonards on Sea, East Sussex, TN37 6DB.

concise crossword

No.3223 Saturday 15 February

- |                                  |                                      |
|----------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| ACROSS                    | DOWN                          |
| 1 German car (4)                 | 2 Rub out (5)                        |
| 4 Hasten (5)                     | 3 Hire agreement (7)                 |
| 9 Jewelled headdress (5)         | 4 Optical illusion (13)              |
| 10 Erudite (7)                   | 5 Wander (4)                         |
| 11 Guitar-player’s accessory (8) | 6 Chinese river (7)                  |
| 12 Remain (4)                    | 7 Fictitious work by Thomas More (6) |
| 13 Promotion (13)                | 8 Nervous (4)                        |
| 17 Ineffectual type (4)          | 14 Blood-sucking bat (7)             |
| 18 Room heater (8)               | 15 Building (7)                      |
| 21 Paper-folding (7)             | 16 Excite (6)                        |
| 22 Drive (5)                     | 17 Forest (4)                        |
| 23 Small and delicate (5)        | 19 Theme (5)                         |
| 24 Every (4)                     | 20 Part of leg (4)                   |

Solution to yesterday’s Concise Crossword:
ACROSS: 1 Stirred, 5 Hilly (Sturdily), 8 Enquiry, 9 Longbow, 10 Pre-lead, 11 Okapi, 12 August, 14 Strong, 17 Strum, 19 Recital, 22 Engulfed, 23 Drawn, 24 Elder, 25 Stricken, DOWN: 1 Sheep, 2 Iceberg, 3 Rhyme, 4 Delude, 5 Handout, 6 Libya, 7 Yawning, 13 Austere, 15 Similar, 17 Outcast, 16 Crisps, 18 Rigid, 20 Cedar, 21 Lunch.

Bridge Alan Hiron

North-South game; dealer East
North
♠ Q 9 7 2
♥ A K 10 3
♦ A K 4
♣ K 5
West
♠ A 6 5 4
♥ Q 9 7 6 2
♦ J 10 9 3
♣ none
6
East
♠ 8
♥ J 5
♦ 8 6 5
♣ A Q J 9 8 7
South
♠ K J 10 3
♥ 8 4
♦ Q 7 2

North had an awkward decision to make on this deal from match-play. East opened a rather heavy (by modern standards) 3♣ but his choice lay between Three and Five, because 4♣ would have meant something quite different – a strong pre-empt in hearts.

Now what do you do with the North hand after two passes? Double to suggest the major suits, or bid 3NT to protect ♣ K from immediate attack? One North decided to double ad, after a response of 3♣ by South, pushed on to the spade game.

West’s lead of DJ against Four Spades was significant. Why had he not led his partner’s suit?

Perplexity

Mixed doubles:

Ins creates furriest green satin gap.
The above sentence hides three loosely connected answers. All you have to do to find them is arrange the six words into three pairs, then rearrange the letters within each pair. The first correct answer opened on 26th February will

South got matters right: playing carefully he won in hand and led ♠ 10. West played low and the fall of East’s eight strongly suggested a 4-1 trump break. Two top hearts were followed by a heart ruff, dummy was re-entered with a top diamond, and another heart was ruffed in hand. The dummy reversal was complete. Eventually declarer lost two club tricks and the ace of trumps.

At the other table, North took a different view when he re-opened with 3NT rather than double when East’s pre-empt came round to him. All passed, and the passive diamond lead from East left declarer looking at only eight tricks.

He won in hand and knocked out ♣ A but was still looking for his ninth trick. I hope that you found the same solution that North did at the table. He decided that his best chance was to find East with a 1-2-3-7 distribution and, after cashing everything available, he led ♠ K! East now had no exit cards and, at the end, the ♠ 10 became declarer’s ninth winner. In spite of his neat play, North found himself losing 1 i.m.p on the deal.

win a copy of the new Chambers 21st Century Dictionary. Answers to: Perplexity, the Independent, 1 Canada Square, Canary Wharf, London E14 5DL.

1 February answers: BEANS+POTATO = SPROUT works out as 36942+189908=217850 or 34962+180908=215870 Winner: H Lazda (Wokingham)

Backgammon Chris Bray

Here’s a difficult play which I got wrong when it came up at the Double Fives the other day. Black has a 4,2 to play in this position. There were three choices: (a) 20/14 (b) 20/16, 6/4 (c) 6/2, 3/1

Over the board I made the fateful (and common) mistake of choosing a move without first deciding my plan, and compounded this error by forgetting to consider the position of the cube. I should have remembered Goulding’s first law: “Have a plan, consider the cube, evaluate the candidate plays”.

So let’s do it the right way: What is Black’s plan? He is way ahead in the race – 57 pips to 102 pips. As he has no priming potential and his home board cannot be strengthened it seems that Black’s plan should be to play for the race. This indicates either play (a) or (b). What about the cube? Although Black leads the race by a long way he cannot double yet as his man on White’s 5-point still has a long way to travel to reach his own home board. However, if Black can advance the man part of the way without being hit then he will have a strong redouble.

What about candidate plays? The three identified above are really the only possibilities. Given that we have decided to play for the race, play (c) can be discarded: it does nothing to make progress in the race and at the same time weakens the home board. Play (a) brings the man closest to home but leaves 26 shots. Play (b) makes slightly less progress in the race but leaves only 21 shots. After either play (a) or play (b) provided he doesn’t get hit, Black will have a strong redouble which White might be able to take depending upon what his own roll was.

As Black will have a redouble after either play it is correct to leave fewer shots and therefore the correct play is (b). Over the board I made the awful play (c) ignoring one of my own lessons: in backgammon you must play to win rather than play not to lose.

HOWARD HODGKIN

Beyond Reason

Hayward Gallery London

Exhibition Dates: 1997-1998

Telephone: 0171 928 3144

© Hayward Gallery, London 1997. All Rights Reserved. Printed in the United Kingdom. The text on this page is a reproduction of the text on the back of the exhibition catalogue. The text on the back of the exhibition catalogue is a reproduction of the text on the back of the exhibition catalogue.

arts & books

Jan Morris in Venice;
Peter Levi in Greece..... 6
Bernard Crick attacks party propaganda; New York's mating game..... 7

Flying blind

Raymond Monelle looks for more than merely superficial charms

OPERA Die Fledermaus Theatre Royal, Glasgow

The last thing Scottish Opera would want to find in a review of its new Fledermaus would be a reference to its last production – a clever-clever updating to 1990s Glasgow and a spectacular flop. But clearly it was a chastening experience, and Giles Havergal, director of the new version, was given a clear brief: no fancy ideas, no left-wing iconoclasm, just plenty of pretty costumes and traditional nostalgia.

There were, in fact, a few witty ideas. Alfred, the Italian tenor (cramped up to the skies by Richard Coxon), constantly serenaded the heroine with extracts from famous operas, including both Bohème and Turandot, which were presumably not familiar to Strauss or anybody else in 1874. Though most of the show was sung in English (the well-established Pountney/Hancock translation), the Csardas was given in Hungarian with English surtitles, a hilarious operatic in-joke.

That apart, the sets were ravishing and the costumes unexceptionable, placing the piece a little later than its time of composition, perhaps about 1910. Havergal, director of Glasgow's Citizens' Theatre, is a resourceful man of the theatre, and he kept up a seamless flow of song-and-dance numbers and attractive tableaux, his designer (Kenny Miller) doing little more than paint huge flowers on the wallpaper and surround the stage with fairy lights.

Most of the cast had a nice, intuitive, light-footed swing; eventually the whole stage tilted and swayed to the rhythms of polka and waltz. Janis Kelly was a colourful, sumptuous Ros-alinda, thoroughly physical and susceptible, with Peter Evans as a stinky and handsome Eisenstein. Andrew Hammond's Falke seemed at first a bit recessive, but his "Brüderlein" was a dream of lyric tone.

When it came to costuming Orlofsky, clearly nobody was ever going to disguise Anne Howells as a man, so she wore an intriguing combination of high boots and feminine décolletage that matched her mettlesome but seductive voice.

But success cannot be designed into a production, and this attractive show witnessed to the elusiveness of the work. Lisa Milne, as Adele, sang beautifully – a pearly "laughing song" – but her comic gifts extended no further than Glaswegian howls and catcalls. This sly, ironic operetta makes no sense as broad farce, and neither Milne, Havergal, nor any of the others seemed to have grasped the danger and despair that lie hidden within it.

Instead, they gestured and high-stepped along on the merest surface, where they were joined by a conductor, Nicholas Braithwaite, who groped vainly for the right style, jerking when he should have floated, never finding a convincing tempo or any trace of delicacy. With no message from the podium, the orchestra just sight-read. Maybe Fledermaus is about bad behaviour redeemed by generosity of spirit, or the sorrowful charm of a society that is slipping away. Whatever its sidelong and sophisticated content, it is vastly beyond the larks of a seaside concert-party.

Further perfs: tonight, 18.30, 22 Feb (0141-332 9000)

Race on the Rialto

Paul Taylor on a new staging that does justice to Shakespeare's court drama

THEATRE The Merchant of Venice Birmingham Repertory Theatre

David Schofield invites you to see Shylock's behaviour as a warped exercise in standing on his dignity

Photo: Ivan Kyril

In 1988, Bill Alexander directed an RSC version of The Merchant of Venice with Antony Sher as a flamboyantly Levantine Shylock in a city where Christians literally spat racial hatred and where a Yellow Star of David was eventually sprayed, like some prefiguration of the Holocaust, on the back wall. Returning to the play now, Alexander happily avoids what has become the orthodoxy in the interim, of relocating The Merchant in the world of modern banking. Presenting a genial, broadly assimilated City of London Shylock always raised more problems than it solved. For a start, Christian yuppies aren't ideally placed to look down their noses at usury. And, if Shylock has integrated so successfully, why does he declare anti-Christian loathing in his first scene?

Set in period, in a dark, sinister Venice whose vistas are framed by decaying brick pillars, Alexander's new staging has the great merit of keeping your feelings fluid throughout. Precisely because he makes no overt bid for audience sympathy, David Schofield's splendid, heavily accented and sardonically humorous Shylock becomes a moving (yet never pathetic) figure. He's played here as rebarbatively hard and precise – so punctilious he even remembers to brush his knees after collapsing at the news of his daughter's abscondment; so meticulously well-briefed he doesn't need to look at the bond when forced to check its details, he just scrolls through it silently in his head.

But this staging also amplifies our sense of the routine intimidations Shylock has to cope with. Salerio and Solanio mockingly impersonate his brief under his very window and kick at the door in a frenzy of contempt. Every time he steps outside, there's danger in the air; and you can understand Shylock's behaviour, in this performance, as a warped exercise in standing on his dignity. Even when he has to pick himself up from the wreckage of the court case and brave the boos at the exit, Schofield manages to keep a straight back and a measured tread.

Cathy Tyson is a warm, appealing heroine but it's good that she does not downplay the fact that, with Shylock, Portia egregiously fails to practise what she has only just been preaching about mercy. In the final act, she reveals a cropped head to Charles Edwards's excellent, anxious Bassanio, who strokes the boyish curls in some bemusement, as if this haircut obscurely complicates his emotional graduation from male friendship with Don Warrington's absurdly plummy Antonio to marriage with her.

I had thought that my days of laughing at those tedious Gobbos were over, but here both father and son are played in a West Indian accent and in what looks like a bizarre, expertly organised identity crisis by the rasta-locked Jah-Man Aggrey. Martin Hutson also makes a big impact as the Prince of Aragon.

The evening ends on an uneasy note. After the other couples have trooped into Portia's house, Shylock's daughter finds herself alone in the garden with Antonio, who throws her a look of profound distaste. Beginning with a girl who is trapped by the dictates of her father's will, the play ends, in this account, with a girl doomed to carry the burden of her father's sins.

Birmingham Rep (0121-236 4455) to 8 March

Still waters run deep

A work about the mating game. Or so it seems to John Percival

DANCE Stream Rambert Dance Apollo, Oxford

Christopher Bruce calls his latest creation for Rambert Dance Company Stream. Many of us will, I suppose, identify it with the ever-rolling one to which life is likened in the hymn. The shape of the work – the end echoing its beginning – suggests a continuity into infinity, and the content (if I may use that word for dances that carry no specific plot) seems to confirm that impression.

The main part of Stream shows us two groups: four men and four women. The choreographer colonises the stage for themselves and fill it with tough, aggressive movement. But after the group of women has passed across the back of their territory, I sense a change of tone in what the men are doing: a slight jokiness in their blockiness, almost like moments in Bruce's Rolling Stones ballet Rooster.

Or is it just that, influenced by the feminine presence, we look at masculine display differently, more ironically? Either way, the men take themselves off and the women now occupy the stage. Whereas the men stuck out for individuality even when acting as a group, there is more togetherness in the women's dancing, a gentle sense of supporting each other. This remains true even when just two of them are left alone, and makes Sherron Wray's subsequent solo even more melancholic in its solitariness.

Then comes a complete contrast. Philip Chabon's music, hitherto jauntily rhythmic for the men, smoothly flowing for the women, suddenly sounds like a jolly Irish dance-hall, and both groups come together on stage, dividing up into couples for what quickly develops from socialising into the mating game. So we know that even if time is going to bear us all away, life will continue.

As prologue and epilogue, we see life in the form of two duets. Patricia Hines and Jan de Schynkel start the piece, their couplings sometimes taking strange forms: she reclining while her feet seize his neck, he soon after holding her cheeks from behind and rocking her head from side to side.

The final entry is for Didi Veldman and Paul Liburd: he very cocksure and dominant at first, slippery as a lizard, but soon maturing into a quieter steadiness, content to be an equal partner. And actually theirs is not quite the final entry, since the curtain falls on the opening couple repeating their arrival, the cycle resuming.

That's how I see it, anyway, but Bruce's programme note tells how the creative process began as abstract movement ideas inspired by fragments of sound that Chabon provided before development into a full electronic score of noises suggesting machinery, nature and instruments melded into real music. The creators, Bruce says, found their own ideas and feelings about the work, but he invites spectators to enjoy the movement for itself and to make their own interpretation. Sadly, we read, this proved beyond some spectators on Rambert's Russian tour, but an Oxford audience responded warmly to this week.

On tour, reaching London for a week at the Peacock Theatre over Easter.

THE INDEPENDENT

HOLD THE FRONT PAGE

Next Monday The Independent introduces a new section, MEDIA+. Whether you are a bombarded civilian, a professional communicator or a wannabe (hungry for page after page of appointment ads) you miss it at your peril.

	THE FILM Hamlet	THE PLAY The School for Wives	THE GIG Suzanne Vega
overview	Not content with giving his Prince of Denmark three times on stage to date, Kenneth Branagh directs and plays the lead in Hamlet the movie. The screenplay is 100 per cent William Shakespeare. At 242 minutes it's also almost completely uncut. A galaxy of stars support – from Billy Crystal to Jack Lemmon – in an attempt to bump up the film's US box-office appeal.	Having brought Jessica Lange to London for A Streetcar Named Desire , Peter Hall goes to the other end of the celebrity spectrum by casting Eric Sykes as a dotty old servant in Molière's comedy of cuckoldry. Peter Bowles stars as the merchant Arnolphe, who's forced to play the French horn. Gillian Kearney is his wife-to-be, imprisoned to protect her chastity.	Folk never sounded as chilly as when the former model from New York recorded her first album in 1985. Icily intelligent, her supporters argued, Yuppie mood music, countered the detractors. Whatever, Vega has thawed out a bit now, and, to accompany the release of a new album, Nine Objects of Desire , she has embarked upon a European and British tour.
critical view	Adam Mars-Jones thought it deeply flawed but that the weak bits were "redeemed by the one decision that seems perverse, even indefensible, the decision that is never made in cinema: trusting the author." The Telegraph warned to a film filled with powerful performances: "You are unlikely to see a better Claudius than Derek Jacobi's... Julie Christie is extraordinary." It added: "Branagh [the actor] makes a virtue of his limitations... [his] production follows his own lead." But the Times felt our Ken had gone too far to woo a young audience: "It's all rather exhausting," its critic wheezed, "I thought it would bore me," confessed the Guardian . "But it didn't."	Paul Taylor enthused: "Arnolphe is a role that requires the ability to listen comically... Bowles is hilarious at such moments." Sykes, he added, exudes a "delightfully knowing brand of benign amusement". The Telegraph agreed: "one of the funniest shows in the West End." "Even if Bowles misses the sheer madness which Ian McDiarmid brought to the role in the 1993 Almeida revival," he vividly captures Arnolphe's almost satanic cunning. "I went out touched and delighted," raved the Times . "Who could upstage Bowles in this mood? Not Sykes, not all three Marx brothers, not anyone."	Glyn Brown had liked the warmth of the new LP but felt it didn't work in concert: "Played against her delicate earlier stuff, the newer work tired with lengthy rock-outs from her backup boys, Vega almost drowned in the mélée ." "Most moving when it is most conventional," judged the Times . But the Guardian was less indulgent: "Marriage and motherhood may have settled Vega and, she claims, improved her voice. But the overall feeling was of a talent that has lost its edge." "Sophistication seems to have been achieved at the expense of warmth and melody," the Telegraph pontificated. "Few of the new songs were as approachable, or as engaging, as [the] old favourites."
on view	At a cinema near you. Bring a cushion, and make full use of the intermission.	At the Piccadilly Theatre, London W1 (0171-369 1734) to 26 April.	Tours to Nottingham, Birmingham, York, Manchester and Glasgow in March.
our view	A solid but hardly inspired Dane, and you'll squirm at some of the cameos, such as Robin Williams's execrable Osric.	Ranjit Bolt's pithy verse adaptation complements some fine performances. A return to form for Peter Hall.	The sharp, bright beauty is still there but Vega seems to be striving for the impossible: to be a rock chick who plays an acoustic.

KEY

DEADLY POOR OK GOOD EXCELLENT

...thought faculty is
...that Veget seems to
...the
...to be
...and
...the

Seeing eternity in the Venetian sand

Jan Morris sifts through the myths of a city where history was as clear as mud

This is an academic work, by an associate professor at Princeton, dressed up in the Yale manner as a sumptuous coffee-table book. As such it will give pleasure to all classes of Venetian aficionado, except perhaps those who believe that Venice is ill-served without some element of the style (Professor Brown is no John Julius Norwich) you will certainly enjoy the lavish, varied and elegantly disposed pictures. If you find yourself overwhelmed by the mass of incidental evidence, the bold main theme of the book is sure to interest you.

It concerns, au fond, the Venetian relationship with time. It starts with a plaque on a pulpit at Torcello illustrating Kairos, the classical wheeled figure of Opportunity, being seized by the hair by a youth; it ends with a sculpted figure on a wall of Ca' Bembo, in the settore of Canareggio, of a primitive holding a solar disc, a figure of eternity. Professor Brown's thesis, developed with an infinity of scholarly allusion, is that the Venetians more or less made up their own time. A people of opportunism from the very start, by trial and error, fraud and imagination, by grabbing the passing chance and exploiting even the most improbable allegory, they created in the end the myth of a City-State that seemed eternal. "Venice has preserved her independence during eleven centuries", Voltaire wrote, "and I flatter myself will preserve it for ever".

Venice and Antiquity: the Venetian sense of the past by Patricia Fortini Brown, Yale University Press, £45

The original problem was that Venice started from scratch, as a community of people driven out of the mainland into the islands of the lagoon in the aftermath of the Roman Empire. It could claim no classical origins, like most Italian cities. It was a mixed bag of refugees, with no civic claim to descent from Rome. This at least meant that it had no pagan roots either, so the obvious thing to do was to project itself as a Christian city of God. Chroniclers learnt to emphasise that the Venetians had been driven into the lagoon not by the Christian Lombards, but by the impious pagan Attila, frequently portrayed with horns; and presently the miraculous discovery of the relics of St Mark, bursting from a column in the Basilica, proclaimed Venice a genuinely apostolic city. It had been founded on the day of the Annunciation – March 25, also the day when God made Adam – and there was obviously something providential about its peculiar situation and ever-growing prosperity there in the watery wastes.

The Renaissance, seducing Venetians as it seduced all other Italians, changed the perspective rather, and made paganism fashionable again. Petrarch was all the rage in Venice. Now Venetian aristocrats liked to claim Roman pedigrees, and it was often claimed that Venice was actually older than Rome, having been founded in an earlier form on the mainland. Like many another European people – even the distant Welsh – the Venetians toyed with the idea of having Trojan origins: did not the very word "Venetia" stem from "Aeneas"? They began to see antiquity in humanist terms – "shepherds, nymphs, and verdant groves," in Professor Brown's words – and to imagine the earliest lagoon settlers as people of Arcadian virtue.

Finally, in the heyday of the Republic, the Venetians became less interested in their past than in their magnificent present, the terrific opportunities always waiting to be seized, the promise of everlasting splendour. They had made good use of antiquity, in creating a national myth, and they were to live upon this myth, it all collapsed in ignominy. "J'ai occupé ce matin", General Louis Baraguey d'Hilliers reported to Napoleon, "la ville de Venise, avec la 5e demi-brigade de bataille"; and that was that.

This is a pitifully inadequate and simplistic attempt to reflect what Venice and Antiquity is about. The book is a prodigious assembly of facts, conjectures and illustrations concerning what psychiatrists might call Venice's efforts to find itself – and to project itself. Professor Brown may not be the most lucid of expositors, but she is a scholar of stunning range and force, and she seems to grab the very idea of Venice, its very stones in fact, to shake the truth out of it.

She finds evidence of the Venetian concern with antiquity in every aspect of the place. She scours the city for remains of the booty brought from Byzantium, from the Aegean, from the Italian mainland, by which the Serenissima tried to demonstrate its pedigree: not just the familiar figures, marbles and Byzantine treasures of San Marco, but a mass of Roman tombstones, unnoticed pillars and reliefs. She describes the growth of antiquarianism in the 14th century, the gradual absorption of classical forms and images into the Venetian aesthetic. She pursues her purpose through literature, art, architecture, cartography, genealogy, even astrology, and if sometimes one is inclined to forget just what the purpose is, and she occasionally has to pause and remind us (and perhaps herself), nevertheless the virtuoso nature of the pursuit itself is a marvel to watch.

She is at her best, I think, when she is discussing the particular Venetian truncations of time – an essential process, I suppose, in the evolution of civic eternity. I have always thought, for example, that the portal of the Arsenale was just a flamboyant expression of Venetian self-esteem, a hodge-podge of motifs tumbled rather raffishly together. Professor Brown dissects it more exactly. It includes a date in Roman numerals recalling the city's legendary foundation in 421, a deliberate copy of a Roman arch at Pula, two pairs of Byzantine columns, a standard 15th-century Venetian lion of St Mark, a scallop shell, a couple of decorative urns and sundry statues of pagan import, all providing a ceremonial entrance to the centre of Venetian naval power. In short, it turns out to be a kind of architectural index of Venetian historical pretensions.

Or take Carpaccio's glorious Entombment of Christ, beautifully reproduced here in the whole and in detail. Professor Brown uses this picture as an example of "contemporising antiquity" – muddling time again. Classical ruins are scattered about the picture, along with skulls and bones to represent the distant past and a culture long gone: but on a ridge in the background, together with a flock of sheep, are two purely contemporary figures, dressed anachronistically in the 16th-century manner. One is a shepherd boy playing a pipe, the other a bearded scholarly-looking figure, a philosopher perhaps, or a Renaissance poet, in attitudes so motionless, yet so alive, that they might be interpreted as timeless.

As it happens, timeless is what Venice always was to me. Despite the tourists and the motor-boats, the film festival and Harry's Bar, the old city still seems to inhabit a moment that is eternal. Professor Brown, in her remarkable and loving book (for she clearly does love Venice, even if she does talk about influencing the articulation of its urban environment) demonstrates throughout how Venice's concept of time is reflected in its art: and nothing is more purely Venetian, to my mind, than the silent hush, so curiously still, confident and deliberate, that is illuminated for ever by the lightning-flash in Giorgione's The Tempest.

An Englishman aboard

Dea Birkett on Chinese whispers

The River at the Centre of the World by Simon Winchester, Viking, £18

There are rivers, mere stretches of water which flow freely and look lovely. And there are rivers that are highways, the M1s of our imaginations. The Yangtze, the world's fifth longest waterway, is a river of this mighty kind. A battleground, a transport route, a creator of legends, a killer in flood, it flows through the heart of modern China and back through the history of where East met, and fought, West.

Simon Winchester was determined to take on this giant. He made the winding 4000-mile voyage from its gaping mouth at Shanghai to the headwaters in Tibet, most of it in a first-class cabin on a public ferry, unashamedly in search of another time as much as another place. What he sees, and what he has read, are inextricable. Auden and Isherwood's Shanghai is as powerfully portrayed as the neon and McDonald's of the city today.

The author even carries photographs of the past, postcards of a land he wishes he was travelling through. He looks up from his 1931 snap of the Wind Moving Pagoda of Anqing, "its skirts dipping deep into the river, a sailing junk passing gracefully below" to the scene today, with "office buildings ... iron wharves ... oily smoke." The note is one of despair: "ruin" and "ruination" appear frequently. Pollution, ugly architecture, tree-felling, greed, carelessness are among the things blamed for ruining the land of his septa snaps.

But from out of this gloom shines Lily, a young and modern Chinese woman, and the wisest choice of travelling companion. Lily is his filter on China today. When he berates the Chinese for killing off the Yangtze dolphin, she in turn berates him. Save the dolphins or starve the children, she gently reminds him.

Through Lily, we not only question the author's interpretation but the very things he seeks. Inquiring after the anchor (yes, the anchor) of the British frigate HMS Amethyst, which patrolled the river in 1949, the gatekeeper at the Zhenjiang museum was adamant: there were plenty of Song dynasty pots and pans, but no anchor from a barbarian war vessel. Undeterred, Winchester strikes out to find relics which seem important to him. But when he refused to give up his search for a forgotten memorial to the signing of the Treaty of Nanking in 1842, Lily reached the end of her long tether. "Your bloody British Empire again!" she wailed.

With Lily beside him, he is instantly transformed from British bore to a funnel for every Englishman's vaguely formed hopes and fears for China. Rather than losing our sympathy, he guarantees it: we, of course, would have made exactly the same mistakes.

In this account with little hope, Lily is our one light. But even this beacon is smothered: for her own safety, Lily is not her real name. This silencing of China's small heroes is, perhaps, the greatest sadness.

Mythic meal: Greek pomegranates PHOTOGRAPH: ROBERT HARDING

Macedonian blockheads and other Grecian turns

Peter Levi is beguiled by an American in Paros

Dinner with Persephone: travels in Greece by Patricia Stora, Granta, £17.99

To dine with Persephone is an extravagant fantasy, but I am sure that she would serve pomegranates as lush as those on the cover of this book – cut open to reveal the inside, as it were, of seariches. One of my earliest memories of Greece is of an old French diplomat tranquilly diving for those black-thorned marine hedgehogs with his wife. Whenever they found one, they ate it fresh. The taste is piquant – like that of Patricia Stora's book, which makes the Greece I remember seem as dull as a faded photograph.

The writing here is like that in a magazine, Granta now or the New Yorker as it was in Auden's time: perfectly acceptable to pass an hour or two, and memorable maybe once in 20 pages. The traveller is a New York poet of some wealth and eccentricity. She trots around many of the classical sites, though she is not your old-fashioned Philhellene. She crosses many glittering seas, and visits many shadowy islands. Paros is made of marble; Andros of stone and silk; and Stora has an excellent nose for the innocent nooks of provincial life.

But she is modern, and a New Yorker. Her life in Athens often reminded me of the writer Taktis (a transvestite who was murdered): it's an accurate depiction of the lower reaches of the population, though merely a foreigner's and not as deep as that of the obsessed novelist. The New York element comes out in unexpected ways. Stora is knowing about whatever would interest an anthropologist (including mythology), but not knowledgeable. Yet her sheer eagerness, her appetite for life, makes out of the year-in-Greece exercise a victorious book.

The only classical text to which she is devoted is that of the dream interpreter, Artemidorus the Daldian – "the great Oneirocritic Master", as Thomas Browne called him. Dreams are back in fashion with NY intellectuals, so perhaps he has been recently translated. Artemidorus used to interest me because of his occasional insights into poetry. He tells you it is a good omen if nymphs reveal their breasts in a dream – as they do in Catullus, "standing up breast-high from the white foam" when Peleus first saw Thetis. The result was Achilles, but old Professor Frankel said that the image reminded him of some famous actress photographed in her bath.

Patricia Stora's year in Greece was an energetic one. She spoke the language, and endured many conversations with blockheads about Macedonia. There are moments when she registers a near miss: as when she thinks how like pomegranate trees are to decorated Christmas trees, and when she calls retsina "wine's equivalent of seawater". But she is enthusiastic enough to visit Evrytria, the most rugged and roadless of provinces when I was last there, with soldiers who had stood guard on bridges – for no obvious reason – for 25 years. Travelling on her own, she is much subject to chance wooers, and records them all gleefully, but seems to record the physical hardships of modern travel. She has conversations which are seldom enlightening but almost always cast light on character – as on the night they decide that Christ did not to save man, but to save God.

The book has a climax, as travel books ought to have. Travelling by boat from Lesbos, she suddenly, at Istanbul, produces an ace of trumps from her sleeve. More than one theme is picked up there, as children in their finest clothes are off to be circumcised. She goes home by way of Athens, and on the last night a friend reproaches her for having lived a year in Greece without seeing a blue video. They watch a number together, including one in which a coffin has an erection and someone makes love with it: "this must be what the angels do in heaven". What would the great oneirocritic master make of that? Grind your teeth, Henry Miller.

What I liked about this book was that it was full of pep. And I liked Stora's sense of the language. "not voluptuous or litting but stony and earthy, a language full of mud and volcanic rock and glittering precious stones". I also liked the well-told tragedy of a Kipissia lady, so moving that I thought Stora could be a novelist more easily than a poet – but that, I'm sure, is because I do not know her poetry. She is probably the first true poet to have taken the Thasos ferry since Horace ran away from the Battle of Philippi; and that is a good omen, at least.

NEW AUTHORS

PUBLISH YOUR WORK

ALL SUBJECTS CONSIDERED

Fiction, Non-Fiction, Biography, History, Poetry, Children's

AUTHORS WORLDWIDE WANTED

WRITE OR SEND YOUR MANUSCRIPT TO

MINERVA PRESS

2 OLD BROMPTON RD. LONDON SW7 3SD

1550 من الامم

A week in books

Publishing hype has led to the mistaken belief that having your novel hit the shelves is, inevitably, a glitzy experience. Acquaintances angle for invites to the launch party, secure in the conviction that fish-eggs, fizz and gathered media are as automatic for novels by unknowns as they are for comedians, politicians and supermodels. Reviews are, ditto, considered an inevitable consequence. Imagination paints a dinner-jacketed, black-frocked rush to the newsstands: life thereafter, a corpulent round of interviews. It's a Broadway Melody scenario that has little resemblance to reality.

Back in reality, publication day is a crossing-the-Equator sort of event which, in the absence of all evidence, must be taken on trust. When hardback precedes paperback, gratified friends inform you that, though they've looked for the novel everywhere, they haven't seen a single copy in the bookshops. At such times, novelists frequently experience atavistic desires for a visible token of their state. An "I've Had A Novel Published" badge, perhaps, like the one that once said "I Am Five."

Only the chosen few get to pontificate to Melvyn Bragg. More likely is a spot on Radio Burgess Hill – late night music and chat to take us into Monday morning – as the DJ asks questions inspired by a press-release. Or maybe, several weeks after the event, a "Carshalton Girl Is On The Cover" article appears in the local paper, playing up the parochial aspect at the expense of all other angles. There is a signing session, perhaps, at a small bookshop in a nearby town – two hours, with a coffee and Rich Tea at a table unwisely placed in the way of the Romance shelf. Passing customers occasionally remark that they have a wonderful idea for a novel themselves, which they'd put on paper if only they had the time. Your father drops in and buys a copy. So does your sister. You sign them.

A review still eludes. Those same friends who couldn't find the novel in the shops learn that the slating they so profoundly hoped you wouldn't get would still have been very much better than nothing at all. Eventually, a photocopied inch from the Oldham Evening Chronicle arrives from the press office, along with reassurances that the Chronicle has a sizeable circulation and is well thought of by those in the know. And the contents? Rapture and devastation are both equally inappropriate. In the manner of a horoscope, the review could apply to almost any novel written in the later 20th century. Except for one, terrible adjective. Which rantes.

An aunt phones to say that your book is going down a hump at the library on the Isle of Skye.

Catherine Feeny

Catherine Feeny's novel Musical Chairs is published in paperback by Seagull next week

Aunt we sexy

Philippa Gregory enjoys another combination of raunch and relatives

Part of the Furniture by Mary Wesley, Bantam, £15.99

Mary Wesley's new novel returns us to her vision of wartime England which made A Camomile Lawn and A Sensible Life such powerful and individual books. Their undeniable appeal was partly caused by an idiosyncratic view of wartime London – opportunist, light-hearted, randy. For those readers brought up on the belief that the spirit of Dunkirk was one of heroic sublimation and self-denial, the view of wartime Britain as a place where a girl up from the country could be assured of a good time was refreshing.

The author was herself a young woman in wartime London, and part of the pleasure of her books is their sense of nostalgia, their authenticity, and the huge frisson which comes from reading someone old enough to be a great-grandmother writing raunch. It's like hearing your great-aunt swear in theory you know she can do it, but when she does it's still a thrill.

Part of the Furniture shares these hallmark strengths of a Wesley novel but the story strains the reader's credibility to the utmost. Juno Marlowe who has just been doubly raped by her adored cousins sees them off on a secret wartime mission and runs barefoot through the freezing streets during a bombing raid. Grabbed by a complete stranger, she goes to his house and gets into bed with him, where they both fall asleep. Imagine her consternation when she wakes in the morning to find him dead! What can she do but slide down the banisters and find her way to the dead stranger's father on his under-staffed idyllic country farm, where she is welcomed with open arms.

The rest is both predictable and so heavily signposted that even the densest reader might find their way through to the typically Wesleyan happy ending. In Wesley's erotic moral economy, unsympathetic characters are punished by death or celibacy, good people are rewarded with tastings of sexual pleasure.

Still having fun after a long and sensible life: Mary Wesley

PHOTOGRAPH BY MATTHEW FORDSCOPE

The strength of this book and the others in the trilogy is the impression you gain that they were conceived as a whole. Never is a character introduced and then forgotten; even the walk-on parts will walk on elsewhere. Because of this, the novels become powerfully persuasive. A girl who has an Aunt in one of the novels will still have an Aunt in another. More intricately, another novel may feature the Aunt, who will refer to her niece. It's a technical point, perhaps more interesting to other writers than to readers, but it shows the care Wesley invests in these novels.

For the casual reader the benefits are very great. The novels create a persuasive world of interconnected relationships, very like reality. This is perhaps why one forgives Wesley the absurdity of events. The bombs which fall but don't explode, the accidents, the coincidences, the missing letters, the surprises of love. She does her backgrounds so superbly that one can forgive the siliness of the foreground stories and the stereotypical characters. The beloved Devon landscape, the pet and eccentric members of county society carry the reader happily to the satisfying end.

This is not her best novel: Juno is too superficial, her story is too lucky, to engage the reader, unlike Poppy Carew or Hebe in Wesley's previous novels; but the many millions of fans of The Camomile Lawn and A Sensible Life are guaranteed the pleasure of meeting old friends and discovering new connections.

Wind-swept orphans in Illinois

Nick Kimberley finds a genuine sense of pain in the chronicle of Main Street, USA

All the Days and Nights and So Long, See You Tomorrow by William Maxwell, Harvill, £10.99 and £8.99 respectively

What noise do clocks make? "Tick-tock tick-tock." And horses? "Clap, clop, clop clop." And how would you describe the Outer Hebrides? They're "wind-swept islands." It's obvious. Rather too obvious, you might think, yet in William Maxwell's fiction, these are the noises clocks and horses make, and poor orphan girls do indeed come from the "wind-swept" Outer Hebrides. For Maxwell, the obvious is not necessarily to be scorned.

To an extent, that's because his subject matter is, precisely, the obvious – those small incidents that make a life; and then those small lives that make a community. Maxwell's community is very specific: Lincoln, the town in Illinois where he was born in 1908. It is where Maxwell's imagination is most at home, preferably in the past, which "is always being plowed under". His fiction is a means of preserving some of the shards turned over by that plough.

The distance between narrator and author, even in autobiography, is always difficult to judge, and Maxwell intriguingly makes it more difficult. Over and over again, he tells us that his mother died when he was a child; that his father was in insurance; that his elder brother got his leg trapped in the wheel of a buggy; and had to have it amputated. We presume these details represent autobiographical fact, but as Maxwell writes in the 1991 story "The Front and the Back Parts of the House", this is only a starting-point: "Early on in the writing...the characters took over, and had so much to say to one another that mostly what I did was record their conversation."

For 40 years, Maxwell was an editor, mostly of fiction, at the New Yorker. He must have come into contact with acres of well-scrubbed prose, and no doubt he did some scrubbing himself. Unsurprisingly, his own fiction would sit well in the New Yorker, where the novella So Long, See You Tomorrow first appeared. Throughout the two books, the tone is moderate and well-behaved, like the characters.

In Maxwell's collected stories, All the Days and Nights, that eventually becomes oppressive as we find ourselves in a comfortably detached small town where a house might have a two-car, or even a five-car garage; and where coloured maids are commonplace. This is a placid, comfortable world in which all is for the best, even when it goes wrong: "I think if it is true that we are all in the hands of God, what a capacious hand it must be."

There is a kind of complacency here that So Long, See You Tomorrow manages to undercut by that most reliable device, a murder – a passionless crime passionnel in which a poor farmer exacts revenge for his wife's adultery by killing her lover. The murderer's son, a friend of the narrator, is whisked away, and a few years later our storyteller meets him at school in Chicago; but the two pass each other by without a word. That failure of compassion haunts him into adulthood. He tries to make sense of it by imagining the events leading up to the murder.

There are times when Maxwell's characters seem to be living the placid, mildly neurotic lives lampooned in New Yorker cartoons, but in this novella there is a real sense of pain, of lives that go wrong and how we struggle to cope. For that I'm prepared to live with clocks that tick-tock and horses that clap-clop.

Independent choice: audio books

by Christina Hardyment

Audiobooks are, much more than the written word, "the words of a dead man modified in the guts of the living", as Auden puts it in "In Memory of WB Yeats". Badly done, they are infuriatingly intrusive on the intimate l'été à l'été between book and reader. But converts to audiobooks know how much added value they can provide: readers who enrich thrillers with suspenseful menace or illuminate difficult texts with lucid emphases, a painless dripfeed through dauntingly long classics, the opportunity to hear a great actor or, most fascinating of all, the voice of the author himself. On journeys they are especially attractive, shortening the longueurs of motorways, soothing one to sleep in strange hotel rooms.

There is no more companionable book on earth for the solitary traveller than John Steinbeck's Travels With Charley (Penguin, unabridged, c.8 hrs, £12.99), and since it is the tale of a journey at the wheel it is ideal driving fodder. When "the virus of restlessness" assailed him, Steinbeck took off from Long Island to tour America with his giant poodle Charley in a van converted to his own specifications. He discovered an America more eccentric, benign and human than anything that hit the headlines, and the wry wisdom with which he views human nature remains ineradicably in the mind. Gary Sinise's voice occasionally has a soporific quality, but he is an excellent Steinbeck soundalike.

The most classic of all journeys is of course that of the "man of many wiles" Ulysses to Troy and back by way of Circe, Cyclops and innumerable trials. For non-classicists it has always been a daunting prospect, but Homer's Odyssey (Hodder, c.9 hrs, £25), gives us the complete text in unusually accessible form. This version is read with unflagging excitement and sensitivity by Derek Jacobi in a translation by Allen Mandelbaum which avoids archaisms but retains all the thrilling rhythms of the original.

Dante's journey into the underworld is a different kind of classic journey, an allegory of past and future ages. Heathcote Williams reads The Inferno (Naxos, 4 hrs, £8.99) with a husky intensity that had me spellbound. Benedict Flynn's translation does full justice to the original and, as is usual with Naxos's always rounded and thoughtful productions, contemporary music adds drama to the reading.

The calm, clear-eyed heroine of Neville Shute's A Town Like Alice (Chivers, 10 hrs, £15.95) also makes a journey to hell and back in wartime Burma. Shute, a master storyteller, is rightly enjoying a return to popularity, but avoid the two cassette dramatised abridgements of the book just been released by the BBC. It really is worth buying this excellent complete version. Then wait for a long haul so that you can enjoy every word of Robin Bailey's gentle, intense reading of this famous novel.

Poetry is a delight (to have by one while travelling, but it can be much more easily murdered on tape than prose. Classic Poems (HarperCollins, 2.5 hrs, £8.99) is a curate's egg, but brilliance easily outweighs the occasional dud and its astonishing cast of readers and many historic recordings make it an absolute must have. What greater added value could there be than T S Eliot, Auden, Hughes and Dylan Thomas reading their own verse. Boris Karloff intoning King's "If" and Sybil Thorndike ecstatically emoting "The Lady of Shalott"? Ralph Richardson makes Blake's Tyger lazily terrible, James Mason puts incalculable menace into Brownings' "My Last Duchess" and Diana Quick show us just why "Aurora Leigh" was a sensation in its day. It is an especial treat to have Burns and Yeats read with the Celtic lilt they deserve. Finally and most unmissable,

Pick of the week

To War with Whitaker by Patricia Hodge, Countess of Ranfurly

Patricia Hodge reads To War with Whitaker (Chivers, c.13 hrs, £16.99) with all the pluck and panache that its extraordinary author, Hermione, Countess of Ranfurly showed in her six years of wanderings through wartime Africa and Europe with a revolver tucked into her girdle, wheeling her way through the labyrinth of wartime bureaucracy in order to achieve her ambition: to stay as close as possible to her husband, and when he was taken prisoner, not to return to England until he did. Besides being a trusty blade-straight mate, Ranfurly is a born diarist and a natural yarn spinner, whose humour and ebullience delight the ear, but who can also be treacherously frank about the major personalities in the confused theatre of war that we glimpse behind Bogart's Casablanca. Arguably the star of the show, is the short and portly Whitaker, the Ranfurlys' English cook-butler who also refuses to be left behind and carries on intrepidly, whether crossing the desert perched on the luggage of the Baby Austin or dancing boomp-sadaiy with his ladyship.

Paperbacks

By Christopher Hirst

The Brimstone Wedding by Barbara Vine (Penguin, £5.99)

The reader is swept along like a twig in a torrent by this account of two doomed love affairs separated by decades. Jenny, a superstitious care-assistant in an old people's home, is approaching the 13th year of a loveless marriage when she strikes up a rapport with Stella, a resident suffering from cancer. Bit by bit, Stella recalls the terrible events which freed her lover but destroyed their relationship. In her razor-sharp depictions of both character and milieu, Barbara Vine (alias Ruth Rendell) is utterly convincing.

Homeland by Barbara Kingsolver (Faber, £5.99)

These shards of American home-life have attracted the swirling epithet "Chick-lit" from the New York Times but that is overstating the case. Many of Kingsolver's stories are akin to diary entries of a peculiarly traumatic nature – a car-crash, a near-drowning, an arrest on a picket-line – but they are strangely lacking in focus, despite her fine, laconic dialogue and eye for shabby detail. She writes with great tenderness about society's outsiders, but, laudable though it is, this kind of material does not make for addictive page-turning.

Trust by Francis Fukuyama (Penguin, £12.50)

Despite its daunting bulk and title, this is a stimulating read. Fukuyama's enlightened thesis is that "a healthy and dynamic civil society" – in other words "trust" between individuals and institutions – is vital for stable prosperity. Overly centralised states have trouble achieving this; so do those where any institution larger than the family is distrusted. The author cites the example of Wang Computers whose fortunes plummeted as a result of "blatant nepotism". This wide-ranging, lucid work is a welcome rebuttal to extremists of both right and left.

The Austrians by Gordon Brook-Shepherd (HarperCollins, £8.99)

Britain's greatest expert on Mitteleuropa has condensed a lifetime's research into this history. Austria's imperial past is delineated at a cracking rate – from Charlemagne to Metternich in 60 pages. The pace slows for the momentous events of our own century in which this pocket-sized state played such an explosively

Can you write a winning short story for 6-9 year-old children?

Don't miss The Tabloid text Thursday for details of the 1997 Story of the Year competition. First prize is £2,000, with £500 for the two runners up – and to celebrate the competition's fifth birthday, we will be awarding a special trophy to all three. The winning story will be published in the Independent Magazine, and the top 10 stories will appear in a specially commissioned anthology from Scholastic Children's Books. So sharpen those pencils – and find out on Thursday about another celebrity's bedtime stories.

catalytic role. Fortunately for all concerned, the last half-century has been remarkable for its lack of drama, though the author notes how the Waldheim scandal shattered Austria's complacent view of itself.

Howard Hughes: the untold story by Peter H Brown and Pat H Broske (Warner, £7.99) Rich beyond belief, Hughes was once a formidable operator. But by 1951, his aides were issued with a "nine-point programme for opening a tin of peaches." His harem of starlets had similar rules: no leg-shaving and no pork ("Howard hated to be in bed with women who had gas"). His celebrity lovers ranged from Ava Gardner to Kate Hepburn. Doubtless the "millions of dollarsworth of jewels he threw at their feet" helped them overlook any character defects. Despite the authors' assiduous research, the man remains a mystery – perhaps there is little to know.

A realistic rector's wife

Michael Arditti hears confessions of a cassock-ripper

The Benefits of Passion by Catherine Fox, Hamish Hamilton, £16

Far from encouraging feelings of dread, invitations to vicarage tea-parties in Gateshead must be highly prized – at least in the parish where Catherine Fox's husband is vicar. If she serves up the same mixture of wit, charm, perception and raunch in her sitting-room as she does in her prose, they must be the best parties in town.

Annie, the engaging heroine of her second novel, is a 30-something ordinand, scarred by her four non-conformist background, training at an evangelical theological college in a thinly veiled Durham. Coverdale Hall could not be more different from the Anglo-Catholic hot-house of A N Wilson's Unquiet Hours, and Fox's first achievement is to sustain interest in a group of characters with such fundamentalist views.

The best (former midwife Muriel and 50-something Ted) are worthy but dull; the worst (ex-army officer Edward) is full of passionate intensity. Fox is excellent at capturing the stolid bigotry of Edward, a man for whom bible-bashing is little different from square-bashing, who believes that imagination is a product of the Fall, and who uses the typical evangelical trick of substituting aliteration for logic, as when dividing sermons into sections such as "Prayer, Praise and Perseverance".

Annie is an alien in this world. While her study group discusses "God and Calling", she fantasises about having sex with an entire rugby team. Having been celibate for 11 years, her libido is panting at the leash. Indeed, she pictures it as Libby, a dog on heat (and Fox obtains much comic mileage when she finally takes it for a walk). She attempts to ease her frustrations by secretly writing cassock-ripping romantic fiction.

Her heroine, Isabella, has "all the directness Annie lacked". She is cat to Annie's mouse, and, in turn, she plays cat and mouse with a handsome ordinand she meets in Cambridge. Their crazy courtship has all the energy and excitement of a classic Hollywood comedy.

Fox handles the different fictional modes with great aplomb, showing the many uses to which Annie puts her writing. At times, she transmutes experience without realising, as when she meets a gynaecologist whom she has inadvertently used as the model for Barney. At others, she steals from her friends to give to her characters. At her most desperate, writing becomes a means of revenge, as when she decides to put a stunning-looking hostess in her next book "and give her peptic ulcers".

The fictional parallels become more complex once Annie meets Will, a doctor-friend of Edward's, and behaves with a passion that was previously the preserve of Isabella. An ordinand to her finger-tips, she is racked by guilt. She even prays that the Second Coming will occur to prevent their sleeping together.

The Benefits of Passion is a delightful novel: funny, life-enhancing and humane. Its faults lie in a certain lack of weight: for all Annie's doubts, there is no serious theological debate; nor any real sense of the darkness that must be the testing-ground of faith. Some of the men come straight from stock. Will and Barney, in particular, are little more than dashing bunks.

Knowing nothing of Catherine Fox but her press release, it is impossible not to identify her, in part, with her fiction. One scene, where Isabella, now married to a curate, serves an obscenely shaped boeuf Wellington to a bishop and his wife, only makes sense if Fox is showing the same propensity for fictional revenge as her central character. But who cares, when it is the funniest meal graced by an episcopal personage since Stephen Fry's The Hippopotamus? Above all, she displays a genuine ability to make religion palatable for a secular age. Forget The Rector's Wife; this is the real thing.

travel & outdoors

Switzerland goes cuckoo at carnival time ..... 10
Take to the piste among Roman ruins ..... 12
Weekend warriors ..... 16

Uganda spills on to Lake Victoria in the form of the Sese archipelago of 84 islands. Reminders of Amin's brutality are never far away, below

PHOTOGRAPH: PANOS/HOLMES, S THOMAS

In the wake of Idi Amin

The legacy of the reign of terror keeps Uganda off the tourist map. But for those who make the journey, the islands that pepper Lake Victoria provide a dizzying array of all that Africa has to offer ... including its dangers, as Anna Borzello found

Although Kalangala, the administrative centre of the Sese islands, is less than 60 miles from Kampala, it took us eight dangerous hours to get there. Four times, the 20 passengers had to clamber out of the back of the pick-up to lighten the load, leaving only the sacks of grain, branches of maroke (unsweet bananas, a staple of south Uganda) and a frail old woman clutching on to the edge of a coffin for support.

Just before reaching the ferry stage, the vehicle stopped next to a rundown house where, on the grass beside it, a group of women were crying. Then the coffin was lifted over the passengers' heads and off the pick-up, whereupon the women began ritually wailing and clapping their hair.

"The man they are crying for fell out of this pick-up yesterday," explained the schoolboy crushed against my knees. Sese, an archipelago of 84 islands in the Ugandan waters of Lake Victoria, has only 16,000 inhabitants, and is one of the less-visited circuits for independent travellers although Lonely Planet included it in the third edition of its guide to East Africa in 1994.

Uganda, which still suffers from its association with the long-gone dictator Idi Amin, attracts few travellers. Sese, by virtue of its inaccessibility, gets even fewer. In Kalangala police station - a settlement of tin huts, loose chickens and courteous officers - the visitors' book in which all tourists must register, flicks back to 1992 in a few pages.

Kalangala, on Bugali Island, is a tiny settlement, its buildings spread sparsely along the dirt road which overlooks the lake and offshore islands. There is not much action, except for the TV set. At night, benches are set up outside a shop and a vocal audience gathers to watch That's Life Mwani, a popular Ugandan soap.

Most visitors stay about five days, rowing on the lake, walking through verdant-filled forests, or cycling along the quiet lanes. Paths pass through poor mud-and-thatch villages, and the islanders greet visitors politely. Tourists are still rare enough to have had little impact on the lifestyle of the islanders and only a tiny handful have tried to capitalise on tourists as a source of income.

One of these is Mr P T Andronico - the heart of Sese's tiny tourist industry, and now, since his oddities were mentioned by Lonely Planet, an attraction in himself. This eccentric 70-year-old islander, with his luminous green Wellington boots and gasping, eager speech, has a manic urge to label everything in his tourist lodge as if he is trying to teach its inhabitants to read.

Outside the lodge, clouded by a noisy tree drooping with the weight of hundreds of yellow weaver birds, is a sign for a car park - a misnomer given that there are few cars on the island, none of which belong to Mr Andronico.

Instead, the tiny shack houses rickety bicycles which are hired out with a map indicating the major landmarks in Mr Andronico's life: the school where he taught; the improbable parish church - perfectly Victorian except for its corrugated-iron roof - where he funded the latrines; the village where he was born.

In front of Mr Andronico's lodge is a dustbin, helpfully labelled "bin". Inside the labels proliferate and even the plant pot is labelled "plant". My bedroom, with its animal skin, religious artefacts and house rules ("No wrong sex"), felt as if a mad old lady had recently died in it.

Mr Andronico's full creativity, however, is let loose on the dining room walls, where his personal history and political prejudices flourish freely. Ex-presidents Idi Amin and Milton Obote are there, the phrase "killer murderer" inked beneath them. The current president of nine years, Yoweri Museveni, fares better. His annotation: "Peace Bringer".

There is no doubt, judging by the curling picture of the Kabaka, the Buganda king reinstated by Museveni two years ago, that Mr Andronico is a fervent Muganda - the central Ugandan tribe which has historically dominated the economic and intellectual life of the country.

Underneath these pictures, the evening meal (plates of groundnut sauce, fish stew and sweet bananas) is eaten with Mr Andronico, his son and interested townspeople. In our case this included a local journalist who came every evening to share "hot tips". He seemed eager for company, not surprising given that there are few young people in Sese. Most children go to the mainland for school, and by the time they are educated there is little point in coming back.

Sese is usually fairly empty. The police came to tell us when another traveller arrived, and the only other tourists we met were a Danish couple en route to Tanzania to demonstrate Tanzanian dances to the "local people". The hostel is rarely full.

Few Ugandans travel to Sese. This is not simply because there is little domestic tourism in Uganda, a country with a per capita income of £150 per month and only a tiny middle class who prefer to "travel out" for their holidays, but because Ugandans, most of whom can't swim, are terrified of the lake.

Their terror is justified. On the return journey, four hours by fishing boat rather than the more roundabout road-and-ferry route, many of the regular commuters, aware that an overloaded boat had sunk that weekend, packed orange life jackets in their briefcases. Passengers were carried one by one through muddy, thigh-deep water, dense with hyacinths, to a sun-bleached fishing boat heaped with dead and dying fish.

The journey, rocking under a clear and burning sky, was broken only when a boat drew alongside and threw more fish inside. Large sacks of mukele, the small dried fish which forms the livelihood for many of the islanders and whose dead-hippo-like smell pervades Bugala island, were also heaved on board.

I steadied my eyes on the horizon, while the young policeman next to me - who was returning to Kampala after a nine-month stint in what he regarded as the lifeless pit of Sese (no discos and only five murders since the New Year) - was discreetly sick over the side.

Victoria principles

Getting there: Competition is increasing on flights between Britain and Uganda. Alliance Air (book direct on 0171-312 5040) flies nonstop on Mondays and Fridays between Heathrow and Entebbe; Alliance is an offshoot of South African Airways (and uses an old SAA 747). The lowest fare is £440 return including tax, but this must be booked by 3pm today; after that, the fare rises by £20. British Airways (0345 222111) flies twice a week from Gatwick via Nairobi. Its lowest official fare is around £700, but discounted tickets costing £400 are available through agents such as Somak Travel (0181-903 8526) for travel by the end of March. British visitors no longer need a tourist visa for Uganda. Accommodation: The government-run Uganda Hotel Corporation operates a network of comfortable lodges. Prices are around £25 single/£40 double per night, including tea and toast. Further information: Philip Briggs's Guide to Uganda (Bradt Publications, £11.95); East Africa: a Travel Survival Kit (Lonely Planet, £11.95). The Ugandan High Commission is at 58 Trafalgar Square, London WC2N 5DX (0171-839 5783).

HILTON

CHECK OUT
a HILTON weekend

EXPERIENCE ONE FROM £30*

For more details call free
0800 856 8000

See also Teletext page 248

*Price quoted is per person per night for two people sharing a twin/double room including breakfast at the Palm Hotel, Hornchurch or the Ringway Hotel, Rushmore. Rate valid until 30 June 1997. Hilton Weekends available between Thurs-Sat. Rates subject to availability, and standard Hilton booking conditions apply.

"Your request for ridiculous holiday injury tales," writes Peter Roberts of North Yorkshire, "prompts me to recount the following episode during a journey to Poland in January 1993."

"At the time, Lufthansa offered an attractive deal on flights into Germany, so I flew to Berlin and took the overnight train to Warsaw. Distracted by the romantic prospect of sleeping on a train while I travelled through darkened foreign countryside (not to mention several beers consumed in a bar opposite the station), I bedded down on the top couchette of an otherwise empty three-decker compartment.

"At around midnight, I was wrenched from sleep by the clatter of the door being cast aside and a barked 'Passport!' Hazy and confused, not to say scared by the uniform, peaked cap and holstered gun standing in the doorway. I rolled over and swung down.

Simon Calder

"In my haste to please the man with the gun, I forgot that the top level in a three-decker is a long way from the floor. The effect of dropping my full weight on to my forearms was the dislocation of my right shoulder.

Dressed decadently in only a pair of boxer shorts, I lay on the floor writhing in pain.

"This made no impact at all on the spook. Evidently the state communist culture was unchanged. 'Passport!' he kept repeating. Perhaps it was the only word his rules of engagement allowed him.

"I struggled to my feet and reached up for my bag. As I did so, I felt the shoulder crunch back into place. The officer inspected every page of my passport while casting glances at my grimaced features, perhaps reading guilt there instead of pain. Finally, without a word, he handed my passport back and moved on. Not a trace of human warmth illuminated the shadow under the peak throughout this exchange. I travelled on, with the shoulder back in working order but painful for weeks afterwards."

This may be what is meant by the intermediate term between peak and low travel periods: shoulder season.

British Airways' offer this week of New York on Concorde for £10 return was not quite as generous as it sounded. If you were lucky enough to be among the one-in-150,000 of telephone applicants for a cheap seat on the supersonic jet, you will know by now that the tax payable on the offer was more than double the fare.

William Read of Stafford expands on "the inequity of 'tax exclusive' prices in flight advertisements". Mr Read says he took the practice up with the Advertising Standards Authority and "managed to obtain a successful complaint against a leading airline's use of deceptive advertising".

The only long-term solution, says Mr Read, is that all advertised prices for flights should be inclusive of all taxes - "on the same basis as other products and services sold in this country".

WEEKEND BREAKS FROM ONLY £199

Lauda-air

From Cardiff and Manchester with Lauda Air. For further details of packages, call 0800 0171 290 1111

هذا من الأصل

something to declare

Carried on up the jungle?

True or false: an expedition is just a credit card away? True, at least according to the new Royal Geographic Society Tours – an association between the society and five tour operators, announced this week. But it begs the question: what is an expedition? When you're on a luxury cruise and the only special equipment you need is a pair of sunglasses? Call me old fashioned, but if I went on an expedition I'd expect to come back with more intrepid yarns than how I learnt to fox-trot in the Pacific or how I got my hair damp being ferried ashore in a Zodiac in Antarctica.

The society has been internationally renowned for supporting adventurers since the early 19th century. But the new RGS Tours – involving five operators – which promote the value and enjoyment of geography – look as if they are mainly suited to those who fancy being explorers without having to do any exercise, be the slightest bit uncomfortable or suffer an injury that can't be cured with the stretch of an Elastoplast.

The RGS operators include Noble Caledonia and Orient Lines (both luxury "expedition" cruise ship operators), Abercrombie & Kent and Wildlife World-wide (both offering luxury wildlife tours) and Adrift (which specialises in whitewater rafting trips). In terms of adventure, Adrift clients are the only ones who battle with the elements (the company has recently pioneered the first ever descent of the Victoria Nile in Uganda), although you don't actually have to be able to swim.

But the RGS also insists the operators are chosen for their understanding of sustainable tourism issues. Cruise-ship waste controls prevent the polar regions being adulterated by caviar tins. All operators talk briefly about respecting the fragile environments they visit. And A&K donates part of your fee to wildlife charity Friends of Conservation. But only Adrift gives a really thorough account of how they have planned their holidays with the local communities and environments in mind.

Environmental tourism, as anyone who has attended an RGS "sustainable tourism" conference will tell you, is not just about appreciating wildlife and recycling. Invariably, the main problem local communities face is the fact that they get only the financial crumbs from tourism and have little say over its development, yet bear the environmental and social costs.

Sue Wheat

RGS Tours, 1 Kensington Gore, London SW7 2AR (0171-591 3157)

Bargain of the week

The present series of Britannia charters to Australia and New Zealand operated by Austravel (0171-734 7755) represents good value, but the flights tend to be longer and more cramped than scheduled services, and the programme finishes in March. From today, Austravel is selling "charter out/scheduled home" flights to Australian and New Zealand destinations. You travel there on Britannia, and back on Cathay Pacific, Malaysia Airlines or Singapore Airlines – with the option to stop at their "home ports" of Hong Kong, Kuala Lumpur or Singapore. The fare to Sydney is £628 return, and to Auckland £612. You must travel out by the end of March and return by the end of June.

For three days every year, the Swiss step out of character, into costume and go totally out to lunch for the 'Fasnacht' carnival in Basle

PHOTOGRAPH: AP

Masked Basle

With the unerring accuracy of a Swiss watch, 'Fasnacht' festivities start at 4am on the first Monday of Lent. By Mark Dudley

On Tuesday evening it was a relief to lean against the granite wall of the 90-year-old Mittere Brücke and detach myself from the crowds. Hoards of people were still teeming the confetti-covered Grefeng strasse in Basle. Lights from the bland, flat Johanniterbrücke highlighted the ripples of the wide, inky-black Rhine. Spotlights illuminated the magnificent twin Gothic towers of the cathedral, nestled high on the southerly bank of the river.

After the noise and bustle, there was a strangely calm interval. It was short lived.

A 50-piece band, dressed as elephants and kitted out with drums, trumpets, trombones, tubas and much more, marched past playing "Happy Days are Here Again". I took the plunge once more and joined the crowd following respectfully behind.

This was Basle's Fasnacht – a spectacular three-day extravaganza that starts on the first Monday of Lent. It takes months of hard work by more than 12,000 people for the proceedings to get underway. With the unerring accuracy of a Swiss clock, it kicks off at 4am with the Morgestraich (or "morning stroke") in Marktplatz. Hundreds of faces poke out from their padded jackets as the lights of the city are extinguished and the air becomes filled with the resonant sound of piccolos and drums. Then, in what seems like a bizarre hallucinatory experience, the pre-dawn gloom is illuminated by the glow from intricate, hand-painted lanterns while a sea of grotesque costumed and masked figures march along, all covered from head to foot so it is impossible to tell their gender.

More than 100 groups, or Cliquen – each containing between 25 and 200 members – make up the opening parade. By dawn this has amassed to a lot. An awful lot. And the music throughout the festival is in equal abundance because, in true Swiss style, it never seems to stop. From morning to night you come across unexpected costumed figures playing music on nearly every street corner.

After the opening parade, there is a morning break. Then the same Cliquen perform in the Strassenfasnacht, and a host of smaller processions wind their way along the official route in two directions – through the old and new town – by crossing the Rhine on the Mittere Brücke and Wettsteinbrücke. Confetti, oranges, sweets and mimosa are thrown abundantly to the crowds.

Every float represents a theme from the year. These ideas originally had to be formerly approved by the ruling Komitee, the organisers who disallow anything lewd or sexual. Mad cows and big-eared royals were two of the more English themes, though there were scores more. And it seemed that wherever I went there were groups of costumed pipers and drummers and, of course, loud, foot-stomping Guggenmusik bands.

The like of which I was now following into Grossbasle and the old part of town – an area home to Basle's healthy collection of historical and cultural monuments. These include the imposing 14th-century Spalentor (the former gate to the city), the Kunstmuseum with its wide selection of German paintings, the red-brick 16th-century town hall in Marktplatz, and the Historisches Museum (set in a 14th-century Franciscan church and outside of which the Guggenmusik bands would give concerts this very evening).

A layer of confetti covered the ground like a hefty fall of snow. Then, when the band started to play "When I'm 64" with a jaunty beat initiated by the trumpets, fired by the tubas, I branched left up the narrow, cobbled Rheinsprung strasse, an ancient street lined with charming houses. However, I was slowed by a small group of people who followed a lone drummer dressed in the powdered wig and flared skirt of the mid-18th century. Gradually he led us into Munsterplatz.

Dominated by the red sandstone Gothic cathedral (its construction stretched over many centuries and records date back to 916 when it was initially a church), the square displayed more than 50 of the Cliquen's lanterns. Hand-painted by professional artists, they depicted the Cliquen's theme for the year. I browsed in the peaceful surrounds, dallying between having a bratwurst and Wartek beer from one of the stalls or a drink in the warmth of the coffee shop opposite. And then I heard the oom-pah beat of "I'm in the Money", which reminded me I was skint, so I wandered off to watch the Guggenmusik concert in Barfüsserplatz instead.

British visitors this Lent may not realise their good fortune, but the pound is stronger against the Swiss franc than it has been for four years. But if you refuse to accept that 5 francs (£2.15) for a coffee is a bargain, just make the most of these free and fantastical festivities.

has rail services from London Waterloo via Little or Paris, taking about 11 hours, for £171. Bookings: British Rail International (0171-834 2345). More information: Switzerland Tourism, Swiss Centre, New Coventry Street, London W1V 8EE (0171-734 1921), open 9am-5pm, Monday to Friday.

TSAR GAZING. RUSSIA FROM £305.

What better time to experience the splendours of Russia than now. Especially with our bargain city breaks starting at just £305. Alternatively, you may wish to take a special twin centre city break to Moscow and St Petersburg, or an art and culture tour from £685.

This year, make your ordinary holiday extraordinary. Visit Russia with the specialist. Intourist Travel. Call us now for more details.

LONDON 0171 538 8600 MANCHESTER 0161 834 0230 GLASGOW 0141 204 5809

Please send me more information on Intourist holidays. I INQ

Name: _____ Address: _____

Postcode: _____

Intourist Travel Limited

Now you can.

THE INDEPENDENT Secrets of the Seychelles

Indian Ocean Cruise with a Kenya stay

14 NIGHTS FROM £1860 Per Person

Departures July to November 1997

This exceptional holiday offers the luxury of a leisurely cruise with relaxing days on idyllic beaches. Fly to Basle for the Club Class flight to Mombasa and transfer to the delightful Flamingo Beach Hotel for 4 nights. You then fly to Mahé in the Seychelles to join the 4 star 5,600 tons MS Royal Star for a 9 night cruise to some of the most beautiful islands in the Indian Ocean: Mahé, Praslin, Madagascar, the Comoros and Zanzibar. A host of facilities on board include a pool, fitness room, 3 bars, a boutique and an elegant restaurant.

THE HOLIDAY INCLUDES
♦ Return economy class flights between Heathrow or Manchester and Basle ♦ Return Club Class flights between Basle and Mombasa and Mahé ♦ 4 nights full board accommodation at the Flamingo Beach Hotel ♦ 9 nights full board accommodation on MS Royal Star ♦ Coach transfers between Mombasa airport, the Flamingo Beach Hotel and MS Royal Star ♦ All port and airport taxes.

These holidays are operated by African Safari Club, ABTA V4000, ATOL 2313, in conjunction with Festive Holidays Ltd, ABTA V106X, ATOL 2172

Reg in England 198997 Newspaper Publishing plc. Reg Office: 1 Canada Square, Canary Wharf, London E14 5DL.

FREE SAFARI WORTH £175 ON JULY TO SEPTEMBER DEPARTURES

Send for your brochure today by telephoning FESTIVE HOLIDAYS on 0990 55 33 55 or return the coupon below to:

INDEPENDENT INDIAN OCEAN CRUISE OFFER FESTIVE HOLIDAYS LTD, PATE COURT, NORTH PLACE, CHELTENHAM, GLOUCESTERSHIRE GL50 4DY.

FREE UPGRADE TO CLUB CLASS ON ALL DEPARTURES

INDEPENDENT INDIAN OCEAN CRUISE OFFER

Please forward me a brochure:

Name (Mr/Ms/Ms) _____

Address: _____

Post Code: _____

☐ Please tick this box if you do not wish to receive future offers from Newspaper Publishing plc or from companies approved by Newspaper Publishing plc. SSC INT 159

BASLE BASICS
The Basle Fasnacht runs from 4am on 17 February to 19 February. Getting there: Swissair (0171-434 7300) and British Airways (0345 222111) fly between Heathrow and Basle: Swissair has the lowest fare, £161.50 return (but you must stay a Saturday night). Eurostar

FOR FREE INSURANCE ON FLIGHTS TO AUSTRALIA, YOU'D BETTER MOVE FAST.

OFFER AVAILABLE 15TH FEB-1ST MARCH ONLY

BRITISH AIRWAYS

Going Places THE HOLIDAY MATCHMAKER

ATA ABTA 4826C, ATOL 3873. Maximum of one month's free insurance. Offer applies to British Airways & Charters flights to Australia booked between 15.02.97-01.03.97. All flights are subject to availability, airport taxes and supplements where appropriate. Conditions apply.

سكرا من الامم

PARIS £75

You'd have to look to find a smaller

0345 551 0345

34 British Airways The Airline for

Battle off the slopes

Take a bunch of strangers, one chalet ... and stir.
By Max Flint

"Life is fragile. You learn that in my line of work." Please. Just eat your potatoes and shut up. "Why did you serve the Bordeaux before the Merlot? You should of done it the other way round."

I was learning a lot from Pete, a fellow ski chalet guest. He couldn't stop. Every mouthful brought another observation from "my line of work" - this being the police force.

"I just don't see the point of marriage: I dunno why you bothered," he told the married end of the table.

"Now pass the wine before you lot finish the red. We haven't had any up here."

This was my first attempt at skiing and my first chalet. Keeping my temper was as tough as keeping my skis pointing in the same direction.

So, Courchevel in the French Alps. Tick, tick, tick in the "good" boxes. Great food, comfortable rooms, friendly staff. Everything worked - except chalet etiquette.

Why comments on the coach matured into polite confrontation in the chalet, then downright aggression at the dinner table. The divide reminded me of school trips to youth hostels, except here nobody could tell us to behave like adults.

I tried. I promise you I tried, but by day two "our side" of the dinner table was flinching at everything he said. By day three we were recruiting members to our anti-Pete cause as fast as he turned off our choice of background music.

"I've got a word to describe that," he said of my choice of tape. "But I can't use it in front of the girls. Del Amiri, Simple Minds. That's what we should be listening to. Top Bands."

Dawn broke on a beautiful day four, and his room was too cramped, the bed made him ache and the wine was too common for his sophisticated palate.

Sun kissed the mountains on day five and over dinner we had the chance to hear how bodies decompose at crime scenes. Oh, and we had more roast potatoes than "this" side (now poorly organised into a wine militia led by him with his partner as sole recruit).

A cloudy day six and I could snowplough and parallel turn to the left but not the right. He, however, spent the day "going above the cloud" to escape learner-skiers who were, quite frankly, ruining his holiday. His militia now demanded their own supply of Merlot to be deposited at 8.15pm next to his glass.

The evening brought our worst battle. He learnt one of our number owned a boat and quickly became Professor Nauticus, self-taught in seven seconds using the Complete Know-All Guide to Sailing. It meant the poor man who was a professional wine-buyer was left to breathe, but at the expense of our lone sailor going down with the gravy boat.

We retaliated. We kept all the carrots, potatoes and remaining wine down our end of the long table. He demanded some red, our team leader Sally filled her glass to the brim and passed him an empty bottle.

He snorted and complained that Sally's after-dinner cigarette

(as yet unlit) made it impossible for his partner to breathe, so he opened all the windows to let in a refreshing -12 degrees breeze.

We stormed out to the pub, leaving dessert unguarded and totally at his mercy.

"What's this? Where's the fruit? I don't like ice cream! The other chalets have better desserts..." The moan died as we left.

Day seven and time to head home. In strict groups. Confused chalet guides watched as each group sat at the other end of the coach, the airport lounge and then the plane. Baggage handlers at Gatwick forced us briefly together, to mingle with evil intent. He pushed our luggage so we kicked his before running to the Gatwick Express. How childish, but we felt we had won.

The late snow

The ski season started not with a bang, but with a dump: more snow fell in November and December 1996 than in the whole of the previous season. But while pre-Christmas snowfalls of up to five metres had resorts rushing to open their chairlifts early, January failed to add to this early promise and there was little fresh powder on any resorts in Europe.

According to weather forecasters, this is about to change, and up to two metres of fresh snow is expected to fall across most European ski resorts in the next few days. David Hearn from the Ski Club of Great Britain is certainly hopeful that "this long-awaited snowfall will result in excellent on- and off-piste conditions."

He adds that this should be particularly beneficial in Austria and Bulgaria, where the skiing has been limited so far this season.

So it would seem this is an excellent time to capitalise on late-availability skiing holidays - but it would be a good idea to check conditions at individual resorts before you book. Below is a selection of offers, all prices are per person for seven nights. Thomson Ski prices are based on four people sharing.

France
21 February, Brides Les Bains. Neilson Ski, Apt. £299 (Eurostar)
22 February, Avoriaz, Thomson Ski, Apt. £310 (from Birmingham)
22 February, Courchevel, Le Ski, Chalet, £399 (from Gatwick)
23 February, Chamonix, Ski Esprit, Chalet, £412 (from Gatwick)
23 February, Morzine, Ski Esprit, Chalet, £298 (from Gatwick)
23 February, Verbier, Ski Esprit, Chalet, £340 (from Gatwick)
28 February, Tignes, Neilson Ski, Chalet, £509 (Eurostar)
1 March, Valmorel, Neilson Ski, Apt. £239 (from Gatwick)
1 March, Flaine, Neilson Ski, Apt. £269 (from Glasgow)
1 March, Courchevel, Le Ski, Chalet, £399 (from Manchester)

Crystal Ski's late-availability deals in France include: 22 February, flights (from a range of regional airports) plus self-catering chalet for four people - £199 per person. A resort is allocated on arrival.

but can be specified for a supplement. At present resorts are Les Arcs, La Plagne, Val d'Isère, Tignes and Val Thorens.

A range of "accommodation and ferry" holidays in the French Alps is available through Motours. For example, a studio for four people from 1 March in Meribel costs £565.

Italy

16 February, Neilson Ski, Macuganga, Hotel, £269 (from Glasgow)
23 February, First Choice Ski, Chiesa, Hotel, £299 (from Manchester)
1 March, Thomson Ski, Livigno, Apt. £327 (from Manchester)

Austria

22 February, Niederau, Neilson Ski, Hotel, £369 (from Gatwick)
1 March, Kirchberg, Neilson Ski, Hotel, £419 (from Manchester and Birmingham)

Bulgaria

9 March, Pamporovo, First Choice Ski, Hotel, £239 (from Gatwick)
9 March, Borovets, Neilson Ski, Hotel, £259 (from Gatwick)

Spain

9 March, Sierra Nevada, Neilson Ski, Hotel, £369 (from Manchester)

Andorra

2 March, Pas de la Casa, First Choice Ski, Apt. self-drive, £119

It is worth asking about ferry prices, lift passes and car hire. Some companies are offering deals. Ski Esprit, for example, is offering half-price for children on the prices quoted above.

If none of that tempts you, First Choice Ski currently has a package further afield in Banff, Canada: seven nights' hotel accommodation and flights from Manchester departing on 20 February for £389.

Crystal Ski 0181-399 5144; First Choice 0990 557 755; Le Ski 01484 548 996; Motours 01892 518555; Neilson Ski 0990 944444; Ski Esprit 01252 616789; Thomson 0990 329 329

Gráinne Hehir

TEL: 0171 293 2222

travel • overseas

FAX: 0171 293 2505

Far East		Far East		Far East		Far East
<h2>AIR CHINA</h2> LONDON/BEIJING NON-STOP THIRD FLIGHT STARTS ON 1st APRIL '97 NEW WEEKLY NON-STOP HEATHROW/HONG KONG SERVICE STARTS 31st MARCH '97 Tel: 0171 630 0919 or see your travel agent Fax: 0171 630 7792 ICAO MEDAL-HOLDERS - 43 YEARS SAFE FLYING
Balearics VINTAGE SPAIN. Mallorca farmhouses with pools. Unspoilt areas. No coastal. Polite & South-East. 01954 281431 AUTO ATOL 2767.	Corsica SIMPLY Corsica The Mediterranean's best kept secret. On island of glorious beaches and spectacular mountains, surrounded by turquoise waters. Village with pools, seafront cottages, mountain adventures and stylish hotels. Plus flexible "Wandering" holidays. 0181 995 9323 AUTO ATOL 1922 AUTO	Germany Brussels to Berlin, Frankfurt to Prague - our trains don't stop for passport control Germany and Europe - best by rail. Bookings: 0181-390 8833 Brochures: 01476 591 311 Deutsche Bahn DB Cyprus VILLAS WITH POOLS, village houses in unspoilt areas. Plus hills, hydries, secured tours. SUNVIL 0181-8474748 AUTO ATOL 808. CYPRUS, LIMASSOL. Comfortable 1 or 2 bedroom flat. 250m alt. swimming & sea. Details 0181 547 1854.	Italy TUSCANY UMBRIA A COASTAL REGION IN ITALY Exclusive Private Villas and Farmhouses with swimming pools and tennis courts. Excellent landscaped gardens. Prices as we only deal with the owner direct. 0171 272 5469 TUSCANY NOW 0171 272 5469 Footsteps Follow our footsteps and join our small friendly groups walking through beautiful and unspoiled areas of Italy. £745 Tel: 0171 917 2966 TUSCANY Umbria Traditional country villa-apartments with pool, charming furnished hotels and flexible fly-drive holidays. "Grand Touring", "Farming and Country holidays" plus short breaks in Florence. 0181 995 9323 AUTO ATOL 1922 AUTO	Italy CAREFREE ITALY 01 293 552277 LA BELLA TOSCANA Very special farmhouse, villa & apartments in 6 around enchanting medieval San Gimignano between Florence & Siena. 1997 broch. 0181-422-8218 TUSCANY/SICILY. Balcony properties in beautiful locations, pools etc. Colour Brochure 01534 31120 AUTO ATOL 1922 CASA MIA '97 save money! Book Direct Private owners advertise quality holiday homes and B&B in Italy. Call brochure 01484 088115. SUNVIL DISCOVERY. Flexible fly-drives to Tuscany & Umbria. Character B&B accom. Plus Sicily, Lazio, Corsica. 0181-847 4748 AUTO ATOL 808. A TASTE OF TUSCANY. Villas, cottages & apartments. For brochures call Tel: 0181-847 4748 AUTO ATOL 2412 AUTO. ITALIAN COLLECTION Tuscany, Umbria, Abruzzo & Marche. Beautiful farmhouses and cottages with private pools. Also Travel 01403 287808 (24 hrs) AUTO ATOL 1432 AUTO. APULIA, CALABRIA, SICILY, Amalfi. Unspoilt South. Hotels, Farm, Villas, Apartments. 01894 722193 AUTO ATOL 4028. LAKE GARDA & Maggiore. Apartments, self-drive or fly-Lazio & Mountains 01529 544455 AUTO ATOL 2412 AUTO.	Portugal SIMPLY Portugal Truly individual villas with pools, glorious views and selected hotels and restaurants all over the country. From the Atlantic coast to the Douro in the north. Algarve. Plus flexible "Wandering" holidays and city breaks. 0181 995 9323 AUTO ATOL 1922 AUTO PORTUGUESE Affair Quality villas along the magnificent coastline, and a unique selection of country retreats set in the heart of the glorious, unspoilt countryside. Most properties have pools. 0171-385 4775 SUNVIL DISCOVERY. Flexible fly-drives north to south. Character B&B accom. Manor Houses. Plus Azores, Madeira. 0181-847 4748 AUTO ATOL 808. ALGARVE. Casa Sorriso villa nr Alvor. Sips & Malt, own pool, BBQ, Sat TV. Convenient golf, beach, bars etc. Tel. (01428) 291534. VINTAGE PORTUGAL. Cottages with pools in unspoilt North. 01954 281431. AUTO 2767 AUTO	Africa SOUTH AFRICAN Affair CAPE TOWN, WITWATERSBURG, GARDEN ROUTE, NATAL, TRANSVAAL, ZIMBABWE A unique selection of Classic Hotels, Game Reserves and Charming Homes & Gardens. Fly-drive with direct flights to Durban, Cape Town, Johannesburg, Harare, South African Air. AUTO 2334 571 Humboldt Road, London W6 8QH 0171-381 5222 SUNVIL DISCOVERY. Fly-drive to Namibia, Zimbabwe & the Cape. Plus safaris to Skeleton Coast, Botswana & Zambia. Truly flexible. Guest farms, bushcamps & character accom. 0181 232 9777 AUTO ATOL 808 Caribbean STUNNING CUBAN INTERCHANGE Tel: 0181 881 3512 AUTO 2428 South America SUNVIL DISCOVERY. Costa Rica. Guatemala & Cuba. add-ons. Highly flexible individual tours & fly-drives. Jungle lodges, nature reserves. 0181-847 4748 AUTO ATOL 808. NEW ENGLAND - Cape Cod and Vermont. Super family resorts and private houses. Bridgewater Travel ABTA V7278. Broch 0161 707 8794 NEW ENGLAND VACATIONS - Des. festive Inns & family homes. non-stop flights to Boston. brochure Line 01727 82221. Fully bonded. ABTA V514 AUTO ATOL 3975. AMERICA for Independent Travellers. Unique collection of E. Coast hotels, resorts, inns, B&B's for year round vacations. 01923 821489

SCANDINAVIAN TRAVEL SERVICE

Scandinavian Travel Service is the Number one Specialist operator to Norway and Scandinavia. We offer the widest range of Norwegian Holiday Experiences.

8 day rail journeys from £596
8 day beautiful fjord resort holidays from £535
3 day city breaks in Bergen from £275

SCANDINAVIAN Travel Service

For reservations and availability call: 0171 559 6666 or call our brochure hotline on: 01443 822242 stating your choice of brochure.

هنا من الأصل

The urge to have a go is irresistible

Jill Colchester and her sons spend a day at the Bristol Exploratory

Kito and Merry Colchester play 3D noughts-and-crosses at the Bristol Exploratory

PHOTOGRAPH: CHRISTOPHER JONES

Puzzle over optical illusions, play with electricity, experiment with chemistry or walk into infinity with the help of a mirror. The Bristol Exploratory was Britain's first hands-on science centre – and the urge to have a go is still almost irresistible. The huge variety of exhibits (known here as "pores" because you explore them) could keep you here for days. Everything is made on site, clearly explained and easy to operate.

The Exploratory is constantly changing as exhibits are improved and new ones added. It occupies two floors of the magnificent Temple Meads Old Station, one of Isambard Kingdom Brunel's most impressive structures. Each exhibit demands a physical relationship to make it work – not just pushing buttons on computer displays – so children and adults learn through experience rather than having to remember what they have seen on yet another screen.

If you had ever wondered what causes a tornado, why the Clifton suspension bridge stays up, or how geologists find out about the composition of rock, this is the place to be – an educational adventure playground.

The Visitors
Jill Colchester, dance teacher, took her sons Kito, 11, and Merry, 8.

Jill: The Exploratory had a very good ambience and was visually very exciting – from the smart black-and-red entrance to the exhibits themselves. As we walked in, there was the lovely sound of children enjoying themselves. It felt spacious, so there was no desperate rush to get on something immediately. The layout was excellent. I liked the way the space was split into areas dealing with different topics like light, electricity and chemistry. The effect of going from the somewhat darkened room on the ground floor to the naturally lit upper floor was startling.

I think it is valuable that the children felt so much a part of everything. Most of the exhibits relied on you doing something to them but there were a few unexpected things like the colour maze which just required you to think about it. I also thought the Stradivarius sound room was a nice surprise.

The children spent a short time on each thing, being lured by the one next door before long. But they could have got more involved if they had wanted. Kito reckoned we needed at least three hours there to get round everything.

He enjoyed it immensely. Merry was at a disadvantage because he has difficulty reading. He had to work out what to do by doing it. I think as the place is geared towards children of primary-school age more pictorial instructions would have been useful.

Merry: The Exploratory was really good. There were loads of things to do and although there were lots of people we didn't have to queue for anything. The best thing was the really long tube which you talked down and it echoed back. I also made everything work on pedal power – the train, the beacon light, the television, everything. The air canon was good. I hit one end and it sent a puff of air quite a long way to a target and if you stood in front of it you got hit.

Downstairs was quite dark and you had to read more to understand what to do. The things upstairs were much easier to understand just by looking at them. I enjoyed the music room where we played with, something that made sound louder or softer.

Kito: I have always been interested in science so I love these sorts of places but I think this is a great place for everyone. There were never-ending things to do, lots to read and lots to learn but nearly everything was hands on.

I really liked the electricity section. There was a plasma tube which you put your hands on either side and it made a green band go from one hand to the other showing the current go across it. I was very interested in the display about artificial lighting. Pedal Power was good. It was interesting to see how much power is needed to run a television or a radio compared to a light bulb.

I failed to make an arch upstairs because it kept falling down – but I did make a nice picture with the Harmonograph and got good echoes out of the echo tube. I also liked the 3D noughts-and-crosses. There was a good exhibition on water where they explained how they cleaned water which I found very interesting.

The Deal
Bristol Exploratory, Bristol Old Station, Temple Meads, Bristol, BS1 6QU (0117 907 8000).

Opening Times: daily from 10am-5pm. Closed for one week over Christmas. Admission: adults, £5; children (5-17), £3.50; family ticket, £15.

Access: the Exploratory is two minutes' walk from Bristol Temple Meads station which connects with local services and the Intercity network. By car it is well signposted from the city centre. It lies on many bus routes: nos 8 & 9 connect from the city centre.

Food: a small museum café serves snacks and light lunches geared for children: jacket potatoes from £2.50; pizza, £1.60; beans on toast £1. Open school holidays and weekends only. Alternatively bring your own packed lunch to eat in the designated area.

Cloakroom & toilets: no supervised cloakroom. Coats can be left at your own risk on the ground floor by the toilets. There is a disabled toilet and baby changing facilities.

Catherine Stebbings

Are we nearly there?

A round up of half-term ideas for kids

Craft workshops at the Geffrye Museum, Kingsland Road, London E2 (0171-739 9893) 18-21 February, Tues-Sat 10.30am-12.45 and 2-4pm, Sun pm only. Children can take part in textile design, metalwork and paper-making. On 21 February three- to five-year-olds will have an opportunity to make coloured window lights. All activities are free.

Reliving history at Warwick Castle, Warwick, (01926 406600) 15-23 February, daily 10am-5pm. Visitors will be swept back to medieval times during six daily performances. The 14th-century Great Hall provides a magnificent backdrop to the reconstructions of hand combat, while in the castle's armoury visitors can handle heavy swords and try on armour for themselves. Admission is £8.75 for adults and £5.25 for children.

DinoMites, Croydon Clock Tower, Katherine Street, Croydon (0181-253 1030) Mon-Sat 11am-5am, Sun 12-5pm. An exhibition aimed at kids of 12 and under which takes visitors on an educational journey through the early years of dinosaurs. There's a quiz sheet available, and other activities invite children to make their own dinosaur landscapes, create clay models of fossils, and play archaeological and excavation games. Admission £3 standard/£2 concessions, under-fours are free.

Old Father Time at the Wallace Collection, Hertford House, Manchester Square, London W1 (0171-935 0687) 19 February, 10.30am-12.15. An activity session which explores the meaning of allegory through representations of Old Father Time and other figures in the collection. The event is suitable for six- to 12-year-olds. Admission £2, booking essential.

Star Trek, the Gas Hall, Birmingham Museum and Art Gallery, Chamberlain Square, Birmingham (0121 235 1966) 19 February, 10.30am-5pm. As well as original costumes, props and sets from the Star Trek TV series and feature films there are videos featuring Captains Kirk and Picard, Commander Sisko and other members of the crew. There is a particular emphasis on the idea that Star Trek has always been based on scientific fact, and visitors can see how some once futuristic screen gadgets, such as the portable phone and automatic translator, have become a reality. Admission £3.95, concessions £3, family ticket £12.50.

The Happiest Days of Your Life? Ordsall Hall Museum, Taylorson Street, Salford (0161 872 0251) Mon-Fri 10am-12.30, 1.30-5pm, Sun 2-5pm. An exhibition about school life since Victorian times which may well cause children to think more fondly of their own modern schools. The exhibition covers subjects such as classroom routines, equipment, discipline and dress. On the more light-hearted front there is a "True Stories Blackboard" which encourages people to confess to any school pranks they may have got away with. Free.

The Met Office Weather Gallery, The Beacon, Whitehaven (01946 592 302) Tues-Sun 10am-4.30pm. The gallery aims to raise awareness in youngsters about issues such as global warming. It also offers do-it-yourself TV weather forecasting and a weather machine that explains how various weather processes work. Admission £3.30 adults, £2.75 OAPs, £2.10 children, students and unemployed.

Abigail Rayner

In search of the perfect family break

Conferences are squeezing children out of hotels, writes Deborah Jackson

I was once sent to try out an award-winning family hotel on the south coast. On arrival, we discovered that our three children were the only small children staying at the grand Victorian establishment that weekend. Yet the hotel was nearly full – with conference parties. As I struggled with my noisy toddler along the corridors, I felt sorry for delegates trying to concentrate on their flip charts.

Further investigation revealed that £1m of refurbishments favoured corporate, rather than junior, interests. The pool had been redesigned to allow the construction of extra conference rooms, which meant parents could no longer watch their children from the open-plan bar. A bigger gym had been built where the children's playground used to be – the new playground was small and dark and out of bounds to over-sevens.

I put it to Nigel Edmund-

Jones – editor of the 1996 family guide And Children Come Too – that hotel loyalty is distressingly split between family and conference interests. "You've hit the nail on the head," he said. "This is what English hotels are like. The problem is that not enough families go to England for their holidays, and hotels end up with casual visitors and conference delegates."

Some chain hotels are even filling in their swimming pools to make space for more long tables and overhead projectors. Since children are barred from many country house hotels, sneered at in middle-range guest-houses and ignored nearly everywhere else, where should the discerning family go for a civilised weekend?

Unless you have city-centre motel mentality, it can be hard to find the perfect family weekend hideaway – somewhere children are properly catered for, without dominating the day. Those hotels which do open their arms to young guests are to be treasured. We have chosen four of the best. The only conference should be over which to sample first.

The Old Bell, Abbey Row, Malmesbury, Wilts (01666 82344). Sister hotel to the famous Woolley Grange at Bradford on Avon, the Old Bell claims to be one of the oldest inns in the country. The philosophy is relaxed elegance with family friendliness: silver service, stylish bedrooms, well-equipped children's playroom and nanny-on-site.

Parents relax by ancient fireplaces (the oldest dates back to 1220) while children are fed high tea. The Den is open every day and nannies' services are free during opening hours. Malmesbury is a small, busy town beside a picturesque twist in the River Avon. In 960 it was the capital of all England. You can't miss the Abbey – it's right next door. There are special winter breaks at £195 per adult for two nights, including B&B and an activity allowance towards horseriding, gliding, golf, tours, beauty treatments or the wine list. Children pay £5 only per meal taken.

Polmally House Hotel, Drumnadrochit, Loch Ness, Invernesshire (01456 450343). One of my favourite hideaways, and the children's all-time best, with a menagerie of animals, a stable full of ponies, a lawn strewn with bikes, an indoor heated pool, treehouse, adventure playground, day trips and organised activities.

Adult attractions include a tennis court, permanently blazing log fire and cozy library. There's bicycle and ski hire, strolling, riding and fishing in the hotel's trout pond. Meals are plucked from the surrounding countryside: Aberdeen Angus beef, Tay salmon and Glen Affric trout. Full Highland breakfast includes game haggis. Special rate for two adults and two children, any three nights, B&B, £399.

Holdfast Cottage, Little Malvern, Worcestershire (01684 310288). Featuring a teddy bear in every delightful room. Holdfast Cottage dates back to the 17th century, with a 60-year-old wisteria and a view that's (obviously) as old as the hills.

Grown-ups come for the food and the impeccable service, but the infant equipment list is superb: stargate, sand pit, spare push-chairs, see-saw, disposable bibs, high chair and family pets on the large lawn. Baby back-carriers can be borrowed, and picnics packed for hill walks. Special breaks for any two nights are £54 per adult per night, under-fives free, five to 10s charged according to appetite. A one-off charge of £5 for put-up beds.

Armthwaite Hall Hotel, Bassenthwaite Lake, Keswick, Cumbria (01768

Kids' choice: the Polmally House Hotel, Loch Ness

776551). This grand, 17th-century manor takes head-of-the-table position over Bassenthwaite Lake, looking south to the famous slopes of Skiddaw and Grisedale Pike.

The hotel's Free Bee Club includes a highly imaginative weekend activity programme for junior guests. There are swimming galas, lessons in chocolate cookery, young etiquette, cocktail shaking, junior beauty and survival training, plus free entry to "Trotters and Friends", an idyllic animal farm.

Any two nights from £77.50 per adult per night, including splendid, six-course table d'hôte dinner. Children sharing their parents' room go free, including high tea.

your mission

equipment required

Le CROSS CHANNEL BARGAIN of '97.

ONLY £99 RETURN (6 days+)

for travel any time this year.

SUPER SAVER

le Shuttle

Folkestone ← Calais • 'Super Saver' price includes car and all passengers • Tickets must be purchased 7 days in advance and by 28th February 1997 • For reservations call 0990 700800 or your travel agent

هاتوا من الأصل

The Silures are coming!

Helen Lewis finds members of an Iron Age re-enactment group on their mettle

Strolling around the Glastonbury lake village, admiring the Iron Age dwellings, don't be alarmed if you come face to face with a few Celtic warriors sharpening their swords, turning knife handles on foot-driven lathes or even going into battle around reed-thatched roundhouses.

The modern Silures tribe is a history re-enactment group whose members willingly spend weekends enduring the lifestyle of first-century British Celts. They inhabit reconstructed roundhouses on sites of ancient settlements, sleeping on earthen floors – and, in good Celtic tradition, fighting.

"I spend five days a week as a bereavement counsellor and occupational therapist; for the other two, I time travel," Eryl Jones feels she has found the perfect solution to a stressful Nineties lifestyle.

Mrs Jones is joined by 30 or so others at weekends. They share a love of history and the compulsion to do something a little more King Arthurish than joining a local historical society.

Members of the original Silures tribe were described as short, wiry, dark-haired and extremely fierce, with tribal lands in Wales stretching from the River Severn to western Gwent and as far north as the Brecon Beacons. The modern group is mainly from South Wales, but English members are welcome.

"We try to emulate Iron Age Celtic life as accurately as possible to show people it was not a shabby or primitive era. This was a time when skilled people lived within an organised society," Mrs Jones says.

The group is in big demand, not only for "hack, slash and feast" shows, but also for demonstrating Celtic crafts, assisting school parties in the teaching of Iron Age history and archaeology, and doing film work. An enormous amount of time is put into researching the era. "Authenticity is the key, and everything we do is based on archaeological finds," says Mrs Jones. "Our costumes are hand-stitched, using material either woven on appropriate looms or first checked under a magnifying glass to ensure that the cloth could have been produced in the first century. The colours must be as near as possible to the plant dyes used at the time, and our tools, weapons and jewellery are produced on ancient-style forges.

Weekend warriors: members of the modern-day Silures tribe

PHOTOGRAPH BY CHRISTOPHER JONES

"Our food includes stewed and spit-roasted meat, cooked on open fires, and only vegetables and pulses that were available at the time. This means onions are out – they were introduced by the Romans at a later date. We also eat unleavened bread and honey cakes."

As first-century Celts, they live in windowless roundhouses lit by candles made from animal fat, sleep on wool floors, and cook on chimney-less fires in the centre of a single room. A Celt's life seems to have been harsh, but they evidently loved self-adornment: the wealthiest wore heavy iron jewellery, and warriors painted their faces and bodies with intricate patterns before battle. The modern-day Celts use the vivid blue extract from boiled leaves of wild wood plants.

The Silures were a tough lot and were never fully conquered by the Romans. After a series of clashes and struggles, they were allowed to keep their chiefs and were given a degree of self-rule, although their taxes went to Rome.

Eryl Jones's partner, Steve, provides warfare training. He manages to combine the roles of chief battle captain and safety officer. Mrs Jones is events manager.

"Anyone is welcome to join us for one event to see if they enjoy it. After three shows they can become an associate member and take on a character to re-enact, making their own clothes, shoes and any other items they need," Mrs Jones says. "A member is expected to learn a craft or skill in keeping with their chosen character to demonstrate at events. We have no rules on the person's status, as long as it is an accurate portrayal."

The Silures tribe can be found at Castell-henllys, Dyfed; St Fagans, near Cardiff; the Glastonbury lake village; Bunter Iron Age farm, near Portsmouth, and New Barn, near Dorchester. Details: Mrs Eryl Jones, 20 Mendip View, Wick, Bristol BS15 5PY (01179 374059).

Mothers tell their children that if they eat enough carrots they will be able to see in the dark. That was exactly what I found I could do one night in the New Forest this week – although the magic element that made it possible was not root vegetables, but a chunky, telescope-like instrument known as a thermal imager.

Our counting deer with the Forestry Commission rangers, I moved into a strange, spooky environment in which heat, rather than light, reveals the secrets of night life on the land. The imager picks up the radiant warmth given off by living creatures, trees and buildings, and is so sensitive that it can detect a rabbit a mile away. Any heat source shows up as a reddish glow.

Cruising in a Land Rover between the woods around New Park Manor – now a hotel, but originally one of the hunting lodges built by Charles I – we soon picked up deer feeding out in a field. The night was pitch-dark, with a thin crescent of moon showing through bare branches, and the naked eye could see nothing. But through the imager even I, a beginner, could discern that the bright pink shapes standing out from the black background were fallow bucks. When we approached within 100 metres, their details became so clear that ghostly flickers of red bounced off their antlers as they turned their heads back and forth.

There were also a dozen rabbits going about their business. As I watched, a fox appeared and made a dash at one of them; when its target escaped, it sat down to take stock of the situation, quite unaware that humans had eyes on it. In this surreal scene, the true colours of the animals were immaterial: because it was their body heat that we were seeing, all showed up the same reddish-pink. For the young local

Duff Hart-Davis

Forest rangers went out at night with a thermal imager, as used by the SAS. They were looking for deer – but that's not all that glowed in the dark ...

rangers, Robert Colin-Stokes and Andy Page, this was a trial run, the first time they had used the imager. But they had an expert tutor in the form of Derek Stocker, the commission's wildlife officer for the south and west, who has conducted extensive trials over the past two years.

Counting woodland deer by conventional means is notoriously difficult. Even with a big team of trained spotters, many animals are missed, and totals arrived at are generally reckoned to be one-third below the real ones. In recent years it has become fashionable to count by collecting dung-samples, but this method also has many detractors.

Enter the thermal imager, which started life as a targeting device on surface-to-air missile systems. Two years ago, the Forestry Commission borrowed one from the SAS, and was so impressed that it hired another from the maker, Thorn EMI, for six months. Again, the results were excellent. Now it has bought one of its own, at the trifling cost of £40,000.

Trials in Scotland, Yorkshire, the Marches (in Shropshire) and the West Country have revealed that earlier counts were indeed serious underestimates. For instance, in Mortimer Forest, near Ludlow, the experienced resident ranger, John Speed, reckoned that he had 200 fallow deer on his ground. In a single night with the imager counters he found 460.

The merit of the device is threefold: it is very accurate; it does not disturb the deer, and it enables the counters to sex most of the animals they see. Furnished with precise data of this kind, the Commission is in a far better position to explain to the public why annual culls are necessary (rangers have to shoot about 1,000 deer in the New Forest every year to keep the population stable).

As Mr Stocker found, the view through the first time seems to take some getting used to. The heat patterns given off by sheep and red deer (which have very thick coats) are much the same, so that at long range it is hard to tell the difference. Roe deer, in contrast, stand out very well, and at this time of the year bucks are easily distinguished, because their growing antlers are covered by the thick, hairy skin known as velvet, and this, being full of blood vessels, shows up brightly.

Beginners, however, do not take long to cotton on to the niceties of the new system. "There are 12 fallow deer out there," reported Robert at one point during our night cruise. "One of them's just defecated, and the droppings are still glowing red."

TEL: 0171 293 2222

classified • personal

FAX: 0171 293 2505

Independent Hearts

Replies should be addressed to the relevant box number, c/o The Independent, 1 Canada Square, Canary Wharf, London E14 5DL

SIRIUS

Who joins an introduction agency?

Read about the latest 2000 members in our free quarterly magazine

Call Free 0800 072 0075 Office hours 8.30am - 10.30pm 7 days/week

DateLine

People usually only meet within the confines of their social circle. DateLine is the ideal way to expand your horizons

For Free Details with No Obligation Write To: 25 ARDEN RD LONDON W8 6AL OR C/O (01869) 324 100

Sara Eden

PERSONAL INTRODUCTIONS

"A stunning success rate. Countless long-term relationships." MAIL ON SUNDAY

London: 01753 830350 London: 0171 499 9626

TRYST

TRYST IS A NATIONWIDE INTRODUCTION BUREAU ESTABLISHED FOR OVER 4 YEARS FOR SUCCESSFUL, INTELLIGENT AND SOCIALLY ACCEPTABLE SINGLE PEOPLE.

ARE YOU LOOKING FOR A TRULY PERSONAL SERVICE WITH SOME OLD FASHIONED VIRTUES AND INTEGRITY, AND FEELS THAT ARE WITHIN REACH?

TEL: HELEN SPAIN, 01568 708854 ANYTIME, ANYDAY.

Connect with

all types of women INSTANTLY

0891 708057

Across The Room

★ Sparkling Dinner Dances ★ Events for all age groups

HERTS • ESSEX • SUFFOLK

Call Eleanor for a friendly chat & free brochure 01277 352742

zygosis the bridging touch

THE PROFESSIONAL PERSON'S INTRODUCTION AGENCY

Professional people can't meet their ideal partner in their current social circle. That's where Zygosis can help. We are highly selective, operate nationally, are confidential, discreet and produce results. We look forward to your call.

LONDON 0171 629 6779 SCOTLAND 0131 554 5555 NORTHERN WEST 01625 822900 NORTHERN EAST 0191 264 2224 YORKSHIRE 0113 245 8767 MIDLANDS 0900 143076 SOUTH WEST 01225 82814 SOUTH EAST 01423 497200

drawing down the moon

The original personalised introduction agency

PROBABLY THE BEST AGENCY IN THE WORLD

Adam & Eve, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000

Lunch Dates

London's most affordable, personalised service for busy people who like to meet over lunch or after work for drinks. We carefully consider your preferences to introduce you to people who share your values and interests. Make a small investment for your future.

Try our free cost & month trial membership Phone 0181 392 9779

Chat & Date

YOUNG GIRLS & GUYS READY TO CHAT 24HRS

0891 22 00 66

NEXUS UNATTACHED?

Firstly, read and answer the following questions to discover whether you need to join something:

1. Do you feel to old for the disco scene and too young to be put out to grass?
2. Do the people you work with imagine you have a full social life when the truth is you go home to four walls and the telly?
3. Do you feel lost at Christmas when everyone is with their friends and family?
4. Are you more relieved when Monday morning comes because you have more to look forward to than on Friday night?
5. Are you going on holiday alone or not at all? (Not through choice.)
6. Do you have friends or family patronise you by finding you a partner for a dinner party or social event?
7. Do you find it hard to remember what it was like to receive an exciting and spontaneous invitation to socialise?

IF THE ANSWER TO ANY OF THE ABOVE IS YES, YOU COULD DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT!

NEXUS IS THE KEY THAT OPENS THE DOOR TO LIFE AS A SECURE AND FULFILLED SINGLE PERSON IN WHAT SEEMS LIKE A WORLD OF COUPLES.

WE ARE NOT A MARRIAGE BUREAU OR A DATING SERVICE AND YET, BETWEEN MEMBERS, WE HAVE AN AVERAGE OF 2 MARRIAGES, OR SETTING UP HOUSE TOGETHER, EACH WEEK. THAT HAPPENS NATURALLY AND IS NOTHING TO DO WITH US.

WHICH ORGANISATION OFFERS THE SINGLE PERSON MORE? FIND OUT BEFORE APPLYING TO JOIN NEXUS.

RING ONE OF OUR MAIN OFFICES FOR THE BROCHURE:

LONDON 0181 367 6328 SOUTH 01202 730555 NORTH 0113 244 5186 SCOTLAND 0141 221 1090 N. MIDLANDS 0121 472 1968 WEST 01823 274723 S. MIDLANDS 01869 338801 WALES 01206 831599

HEAD OFFICE 01237 471704

NEXUS HOUSE, 6 THE QUAY, BIDEFORD, NDEVON, EX39 2HW.

INFORMATION TAPES 0891 886 978 - calls are charged at 36p per minute cheap rate and 48p per minute at all other times.

NOTICE TO READERS

The Independent cannot guarantee that respondents will receive a reply when answering advertisements on this page, although we hope that as a matter of courtesy they will.

When making contact with people for the first time it is advisable to meet in a public place and let a member of your family or trusted friend know where you will be.

We would advise readers and advertisers to exercise caution when giving out personal details. This will be respected by genuine respondents.

DINERS PROFESSIONAL

"The Dining Club for young, unattached professional people"

Select local restaurants, fine food and a good time! What more could you want?

Contact: Stuart or Carol on 01277 624199

Mon-Fri, Office Hours 9am-6pm or weekends on 0374 753494

Very low membership fee, 25-45 age groups (strictly)

"For good fun, full introductions and above all no carnations"

TEENA ARA

CALL DINERS PROFESSIONAL NOW!

Caroline Crowther

Unattached Professionals in the South and West

0117 973 5877

HEREFORD • GLOS • WYKE • DEVON • SOMERSET • DORSET • BRISTOL • EXETER • TRURO • S. WALES

talk to me

0891 56 55 55

GAY

0891 226 800

SPECIAL INTERESTS

MORE GUYS ON LINE EVERY DAY

THE DINING CLUB (Est. '88)

The nation's only countrywide dining club for unattached professionals. Call Chris now for personal, confidential services on Bristol (0117) 973 6883.

BRISTOL CALLING

Meet someone special with Elite Introductions. Call Chris now for personal, confidential services on Bristol (0117) 973 6883.

MINOR'S EYE INTRODUCTIONS

For Kent & London post singles. 12mins + for just £50. Offer ends 28th Feb. Free phone 0800 438222

FUN SINGLES HOLIDAY

In Andalusian farmhouse for 1 week June 21st. Tel 0181 8860767 for details.

MALE, MID-20'S, sporty, energetic

WLM in clubbing/active. WLM a young attractive female with a BSCN for friendship and possible relationship. Location based. Photo essential! Box No 11974.

MALE, 45, ESSEX, GREEN

WLM 35-40, early music, food, Kropshin, Feynman, Hume, science, religion, T.V. WLM a woman with like baggage. Box No 11968.

GOOD TIMES NEEDED!

Attractive male, 29, WLM seeking female for club, films & laughs. Box No 11982.

MALE, 36, ATTRACTIVE, unattached

but passive, seeks suitable dominant attractive female. Frank letter and photograph (returned) appreciated. Box No 11972.

2 ACADEMIC WOMEN

In good shape body and mind, seeks males 45-55, Oxn, for quality interpersonal relationship. Box No 11973.

NORMAL ATTRACTIVE WOMAN

40's, divorced, Oxford based, three art books, clubs, outdoors. WLM sincere, intelligent male, 35-35 for relationship. Box No 11974.

TWO WARM, INTELLIGENT

Independent females, 35 and 45, living in Tuscany, would like to share their lives with a man of similar age. Photo please. Box No 11975.

PROF. MALE 42, romantic, intelligent

WLM a bright, strong, gentle girl, 30-40 years old, for a relationship. Bristol/South West. Box No 11976.

CARING ROMANTIC PROFESSIONAL

Male, 40's, looks 30's, lives in beautiful countryside. WLM attractive woman in her 30's. Photo please. Box No 11977.

HEREFORDSHIRE HERO

(preferably tall), who is kind, personable and has a good sense of humour. WLM attractive woman in her 30's. Photo please. Box No 11978.

GAY MALE 37, professional stressed and heading for 40, WLM a bright, strong, gentle girl, 30-40 years old, for a relationship. Box No 11979.

Anna Pavord continues her series on gardening principles. This week: pruning

Plants present many of the same characteristics as children. An intense period of bringing them on, worrying about the right food and so on, is followed by an equally intense period of trying to hold them back. But gardeners do have the enormous advantage over parents: there is no equivalent pruning in child care. It is a mistake, though, to look at secateurs primarily as defensive weapons. Good pruning is a matter of working with, rather than against, a plant. The most important thing, before you make any cuts, is to have clearly in your mind the essential qualities of the plant you are about to attack.

If you have a tall, upright shrub blocking a view in the garden, it is pointless to chop the top off each season in an effort to refashion it as a short shrub. Instead, you must come to terms with the irritating fact that you, or the previous owner of the garden, have planted it in the wrong place. Therefore, it should be moved rather than heavily redesigned. Some tall, upright shrubs – it may be philadelphus or May-dwelling kerria – do need regular pruning, but this is not to make them shorter. It is to ensure a plentiful display of fresh new growth that will over more freely than the old.

Pruning is something we impose on shrubs for our own ends rather than theirs. Shrubs do not die if they are left unpruned, as anyone who has taken over a neglected garden knows only too well. Away from the flashing knife, jasmine just keeps getting bigger. So do pyracantha, forsythia and weigela. Pruning is a useful tool in erecting the delicate barrier against chaos which is at the core of garden-making. A garden is a construct, a reordering of the elements – earth, water, leaves, flowers – that exist untrammelled on the other side of the barrier.

Armed with secateurs and some strong, long-handled loppers, you become a sculptor, releasing the forms suggested by the material to hand. With overgrown shrubs, you have a choice: sculpting or moulding. The second is the more drastic: cutting the whole thing to the ground and working with the new growths that spring up the following season. This is the best course to take if you want to move a shrub. Unencumbered by top growth, it will be easier to manhandle. It will also find the business of putting down new roots easier if it does not simultaneously have to send food and drink up to the top storey.

This is what I am going to do with an Alba rose that has become ridiculously large and blots out the planting behind. Once I had become irritated by it, I saw how little it was contributing after its brief, though admittedly heady, season of flowering. It needs a less prominent position. There is still time, before it gets into full growing gear, to cut it down and move it to a new billet.

PHOTOGRAPH: GARDEN PICTURE LIBRARY

You've got to be cruel to be kind

From this time of the year onwards, gardeners get infected by a kind of fever. We want to get outside and start flailing around, trying to regain possession of the battleground. There is a tendency to snip away at everything in sight, reducing all shrubs, whatever their habit, to barbed bushes. Resist the temptation. The garden may be tidy, but by reducing all the shrubs to the same common denominator you will have missed the point of growing them at all.

In the most general terms, shrubs that flower in the first half of the year do so on growth made during the previous year. These can be pruned after flowering. Shrubs that flower in the second half of the year bear the flowers on the new wood they have made in the first half. These are best not pruned straight after flowering, but left until about now.

Pruning kicks a shrub into top growing gear. "Crums," it says to itself, "someone's trying to do me in," and it pumps energy into dormant growth buds lying along its stems to replace what it feels it has lost. If you pruned a late summer-flowering buddleia or caryopteris when it had just finished flowering, the resultant tender new growths would coincide fatally with the first frosts. So you leave them until February before pruning.

Buddleia thrives perfectly well without any pruning, as you can see on any railway embankment. But, left unpruned, the bushes get very big. And the trusses of flower coming from old wood are smaller than the ones that are produced on new wood. So, to get the shrub to produce the showiest flowers, you need to persuade it to produce new wood each season.

First, cut out all weak and straggly growths altogether.

Then cut back the rest of the growths drastically, leaving just one or two pairs of buds on each branch. Old specimens may become congested after years of this treatment. If a likely looking new shoot springs from below the main framework, take the opportunity to saw away one of the old branches completely.

Rambling roses and rambler types such as 'Albermarle' should have been dealt with when they finished flowering last year. The climbers that need attention now are the climbing sorts of hybrid tea roses.

Roses in this group flower on new wood but (unlike ramblers) rarely produce new growths from the base of the plant. You are much more likely to find new shoots growing from old wood higher up the plant. Cut old stems back to the junction with the new growth and tie the new growth in. Cut back the lateral growths (the side branches springing from the main ones) to about six inches. Now and again, it pays to take out a stem completely at ground level, especially when the main framework of a climbing rose has crept higher and higher up its support. This drastic reduction sometimes forces the rose to send out a new shoot from the base. A hefty spring mulch will help, too.

All dogwoods, such as Cornus alba 'Elegantissima', grown for their decorative winter bark, should be cut back hard now. The bark colour is much brighter on new growth than old, so you want as much of it as you can get.

I cheat here and cut just half back each season. That is because I do not want to lose entirely the bulk of the shrub in spring. For the all-or-nothing effect, cut back all growths to within three inches of the ground. Ambivalent gardeners can cut out the duller coloured wood and leave the rest. 'Elegantissima' has pretty, variegated foliage, so there is some merit in having this sooner rather than later.

Pruning practicalities

This checklist may help new gardeners to decide which pruning treatment to deal out to common shrubs, and avoid unnecessary haircuts.

No regular pruning; occasional thinning and removal of dead shoots: Abelia, abutilon, acer, camellia, evergreen ceanothus, cistus, cotoneaster, cythrus, elaeagnus, fatsia, genista, hamamelis, hibiscus, hydrangea, magnolia, osmanthus, pyracantha (but can be trimmed to shape if necessary May-July), rhododendron, senecio (cut back flower stems in autumn), skimmia, syringa.

Remove one-third of oldest shoots in spring or after flowering each year, to encourage fresh flowering shoots: Berberis, choisya, cotinus, deutzia, escallonia, forsythia, hydrangea (or leave unpruned), winter jasmine, kerria, philadelphus, philomis, potentilla, ribes, rosemary, spiraea, symphoricarpos, viburnum (early flowering), weigela.

Cut back hard in spring: Buddleia, caryopteris, deciduous ceanothus, ceratostigma, cornus (foliage forms), fuchsia (frost usually does it for you), lavatera, perovskia.

TOOLSHED: GREENHOUSES

Given even the slightest encouragement, gardening tends to progress rapidly from necessary chore to obsessive passion. At some point in this transition you are bound to have cause to consider buying a greenhouse. Do it. With the exception of a new and bigger garden, nothing can so immediately and dramatically extend your horticultural horizons.

The standard greenhouse is 6ft x 8ft, but any sensible gardener will go as big as he or she can afford and accommodate. It will fill up remarkably quickly. When you sow a packet of seeds you don't need a lot of room, but by the time the seedlings are pricked out into three-inch pots it is a different story. Some greenhouses are designed to accept add-on sections, allowing for expansion in line with demand, which seems eminently sensible. For the tightest spaces, a hexagonal design provides a lot of growing room for the area covered and looks natty into the bargain.

A big decision is whether to go for wood or metal. The imprudence of using a framework containing iron is illustrated by the small fornice recently spent on restoring the Victorian palm house at Kew. Iron rusts – and greenhouses are damp places. The majority of greenhouses are now of non-corroding aluminium which is both cheap and virtually maintenance-free. A new 6ft x 8ft one can be yours for less than £300. However, its bright, silvery surface tends to disconcertingly obtrusive. An acrylic paint finish, available in a variety of neutral colours, spares this embarrassment but bumps up the price considerably.

Wooden greenhouses have the great advantage of being more attractive to look at. The main drawback is that most softwoods rot fairly rapidly unless they are painted or varnished and regularly maintained. The only way to avoid this major inconvenience is to use a naturally durable timber such as Western Red Cedar. This will resist rot for decades without any treatment, and weather to a pleasing silvery grey. Unfortunately, wouldn't you just know it, they cost at least twice as much as an equivalent aluminium model.

Horticultural glass is supplied as standard to most greenhouses. Other possible options are toughened glass (expensive), or various plastics such as polycarbonate, polythene or rigid UPVC. All are less good at transmitting light and have a limited life span so are only worth considering if there is a real risk that children, or vandals, may break the glass.

It always makes sense to look before you buy, and larger garden centres usually have a number of show greenhouses. Check the framework is sturdy, with no big gaps between panels. The door should fit well, open easily and preferably be wide enough for a wheelbarrow. The ridge height should be a minimum of 7ft sloping down to not less than 5ft at the eaves.

The biggest problem with most off-the-shelf greenhouses is inadequate ventilation. The area of the opened vents should be around one sixth that of the floor. For a 6ft x 8ft greenhouse this means a minimum of three: preferably two in the roof and one at lower level, so cool air can be drawn in at the bottom as hot air leaves from the top. Most manufacturers will fit extra vents for a reasonable charge – money well spent.

The shopping list does not stop at the structure itself. You will certainly want staging (wide, worktop-height shelving) along at least one side. This needs to be sturdy and easy to remove. Running mains electricity out to a greenhouse can be an expensive undertaking but it will greatly increase your options. An electric fan heater is the most efficient method of heating a greenhouse and a heated propagator is a great help for raising both seed and cuttings.

Finally, a warning. Putting up a greenhouse can be like struggling with an inscrutable puzzle. You would be wise to get in at least one extra pair of hand and be prepared for a long and frustrating day.

Tom Barber

Just published is the new Yellow Book (NGS £3.50), listing the 3,500 gardens open this year under the National Gardens Scheme. Early openings to catch displays of snowdrops have become an increasingly popular. Among gardens open either this week or next are:

Bucks Great Barfield, High Wycombe (01494 563741), home of the snowdrop king, Richard Nutt. Open next Sunday (2-5pm). Admission £1.

Cambs Anglesey Abbey, Lode (01223 811200) a fine National Trust garden where 30 different kinds of snowdrop re-emerged after underground had been cleared. Open this weekend and next (11am-4pm). Admission £3.20.

Devon Little Cumbre, Pennsylvania Rd, Exeter (01392 58315). Dr and Mrs John Lloyd's half-acre garden with snowdrops, hellebores and small trees chosen for their bark. Open next Sunday (2-5pm). Admission £1. Yonder Hill, Colaton Raleigh (01395 567541), part of a four-acre smallholding with snowdrops (and rheas). Open next Sunday (11am-5pm). Admission £1.

Glos Minchinhampton Gardens, Minchinhampton. Two gardens, Lammis Park and St Francis (01453 82188) with giant snowdrops and trough gardens. Open tomorrow (11am-4.30pm). Admission £2. The Old Rectory, Duntisbourne Rouse, nr Cirencester, described brilliantly by owner Mary Keen in her recent book Creating a Garden (Conran Octopus, £25). Winter flowers a speciality. Open Monday 24 Feb (11am-3pm). Admission £2. Cinderline Cottage, Dymock, nr Newent (01531 890265). A huge collection of snowdrops, both species and hybrids. Open tomorrow, and 18 and 20 Feb (12-5pm). Admission £1.

CUTTINGS

Hants Little Court, Crawley, nr Winchester (01962 776365), peaceful, sheltered garden with a new spring woodland walk. Open tomorrow, and 17 and 18 Feb (2-5.30pm). Admission £1.50. Kent Goodnestone Park, Wingham, nr Canterbury. Jane Austen stayed here amongst the spring bulbs. Open tomorrow (12-6pm). Admission £2.30.

Leam 190 Maidstone Rd, Chatham, snowdrops, acornies and a serene garden. Open next Sunday (2-5pm). Admission £1.50. Lines 21 Chapel St, Haccoby (01778 57031-4). Hellebores and snowdrops are to the fore at the moment. Open today and tomorrow, and next weekend (11am-5pm). Admission £1. Manor Farm, Keisby, a plantsman's half-acre garden with good collections of snowdrops and hellebores. Open next Sat and Sun (11am-4pm). Admission £1.

London Myddelton House Gardens, Bulls Cross, Enfield (01992 713838), the famous gardens created by the Edwardian plant enthusiast Edward A Bowles. Open next Sunday and Monday (2-5pm). Admission £1.25.

Norfolk Rainthorpe Hall, Tasburgh, south of Norwich (01508 470613). Snowdrops and hazel coppice just beginning to swing with catkins. Open next Sunday (1-4pm). Admission £2.50.

Notts Hodsok Priory, Blyth, (01909 591204). Thousands of acornies and snowdrops. Open daily (10am-4pm) for four weeks during Feb and March (check with the Priory for start of show). Admission £2.50.

Oxon Broadwell House, Broadwell, nr Lechlade (01367 860230), good topiary and early spring bulbs. Open tomorrow (2-4pm). Admission £1.50.

Shropshire Erway Farm House, Duddeston Heath, nr Ellesmere (01691 75479), rare and interesting plants including many different kinds of snowdrop. Open next Sunday (1-5pm). Admission £1.50. Surrey 9 Raymoad Close, Fetcham opening for the first time next Sunday (12-4pm). Admission £1.50.

Wilts Lacock Abbey Gardens, Lacock, carpets of acornies and snowdrops at this National Trust property. Open today and tomorrow, and next weekend (2-5pm). Admission £1.50.

Wores Dial Park, Chaddesley Corbett, (01562 777451). Collections of snowdrops in this recently developed garden. Open 19 and 20 Feb (1-5pm). Admission £1.

AN ASHDOWN SPECIAL OFFER FOR FEBRUARY

QUALITY ROSE ARCH - SAVE OVER 30%

WAS £32.90 INC P&P

Now only
£19.95 +£2.95 P&P

You won't find a more rewarding or more affordable way to transform the appearance of your garden with cascades of glorious summer colour. Imagine the possibilities. Use your arch to form romantic and fragrant entrances from one part of your garden to another. As a focal point over a path, forming a gateway or even as a charming floral porch over a door. A series of arches draped with clematis or honeysuckle creates the graceful pergola effect so evocative of the English country garden.

Our special offer arch is based on a traditional design and is the natural and improved successor to the classic structures of the Victorian era. Constructed from strong steel tube, finished with a maintenance-free black nylon coating with moulded joints and horizontal. Supplied ready for easy self-assembly your arch will provide enduring pleasure for many years to come. But we do advise you to place your order now.

The offer is only available by mail order to readers of this advertisement who respond before the offer closes on February 28th 1997.

Your money back if not delighted - return unused within 14 days.

ASHDOWN SPECIAL OFFERS

East Grinstead, Sussex RH19 2HG. A Division of Agri-Trade Ltd. The company is registered under the Data Protection Act 1984. Registered in England 1082220.

ORDER NOW - OFFER ENDS FEBRUARY 28TH

Please send me (only if ROSE ARCHES at £19.95 + £2.95 P&P)

Send cheque to Ashdown Special Offers, East Grinstead, Sussex RH19 2HG.

Or charge MasterCard ☐ Visa ☐ Switch ☐ Total £

Expires

Name

Address

Postcode

Telephone

Please tick here if you do not wish to receive other mail offers from selected companies

Registered in England: 1082220

VAT Number: 210088003

MASTERCARD / VISA / SWITCH ☎ 01342 310050 (24hrs) FAX: 01342 310099

SNOWDROPS IN THE GREEN

Single Snowdrops	£3.50 per 50
Double Snowdrops	£6.50 per 100
Acornies	£8.50 per 100
Miniature Daffodils	£7.00 per 50
Snowflakes	£5.00 per 20
Wildfuchs	£5.00 per 10
Wildfuchs	£5.00 per 20

All bulbs freshly lifted for each order. Please add £1.00 postage per order. Cheques & postal orders only.

PENSTEMON

We are specialist growers of these beautiful cottage garden penstemons with gorgeous lavender bell shaped flowers with stems from June to November. We are offering 6 individually named varieties in the widest choice of colours to £11 including postage. Delivery early spring. Please make cheques payable to: Penstemon Plant Raisers, Penstemon, Penstemon, Worsley W19 2HS. Tel: 01386 554672

Get Growing in a GrowMate!

Call now for a free brochure on 01631 720536, or write to: Blackwoodsmen, Dept RD, Blackwoodsmen, OSAN, Argyll, PA37 1SL.

To advertise in this section please call 0171 293 2323.

كلنا من الأدلة

There is something about a used car that is intrinsically more interesting than a new one. That patina of age, the mystery of its history. Each used car is unique whereas a new car is simply the product of a giant sausage machine.

The other day a photographer friend gave me a lift in a marvellous old car: a Y-reg Citroën CX. It cost him £700 and was in good condition, having been garaged all its life. As with all CXs, it rode with an insouciant gracefulness and suppleness, moving with the charm of a grand old dame rather than the inelegant loiter of a Doc Martens-shod teenager. (Too many modern cars have kick-your-butt suspensions, the upshot of tyres that are too big to make the car look aggressive.)

After the experience in my friend's CX, I decided to play DAT (Dreaming with Auto Trader), one of the car enthusiast's favourite games. It requires merely a sense of imagination, a copy of a buyer's guide and a wet weekend when contestants have maximum spare time. Like most DAT contestants, I concentrated on what the trade likes to call "prestige marques". Also the bigger the better, because bigger cars tend to give better service in their dotage. Besides, big cars depreciate faster, so represent better used value. Old Mercs and Volvos last better than any other big prestige cars but unfortunately everybody else knows this, so their used prices are higher. Mind you, there were some bargains about in last week's game. How about a 1983 Mercedes 380SE for £2,950? (The last S-class was quite the loveliest Mercedes post-war saloon and probably the best made.) There were loads of good big Volvos for £2,500 to £3,000 but, deep down, I know I'd rather have a Merc. Or a Jag. Jags have lousy residual values because they have lousy reputations for reliability. Last week's Auto Trader listed many of the last generation XJ40 series, one of the least reliable and thus fastest-depreciating of all Jaguar saloons, for less than £4,000. There was an 1988 Sovereign for £3,995, another E-reg Sovereign for only £34,95 (OK it had only the anaemic 2.9 engine, but for this sort of money who cares if it is outdragged by mopeds from the lights?) and a 1987 2.9 XJ6 for only £2,995. Rolls-Royces also drop in value as fast as pebbles in a stream, and the old Silver Shadow is far more elegant than the latest boy Silver Dawn. A 1978 Shadow II for £5,950 seemed the pick of the bunch but there were many other Shadows for under £10,000. That's less than 10 per cent of what you'd pay for a new Roller and with all the essential charms of Rolls-Royce motoring intact. There weren't so many CXs last week but there were loads of big cheap Renaults, BMWs and Alfas. I love old Alfas because they look so great and they're fun to drive but I'd never buy one as main transport. Old Alfas are quite the worst made west European cars of all. Sometimes, even when playing the DAT game, common sense has to make a stand.

Something about old cars brings out the DAT in everyone

Gavin Green

A solution to the burning question

A new engine boasts the best of petrol and diesel. John Simister tries it out

Have you noticed how diesels have gone out of fashion? Not so long ago, driving a diesel was touted as a highly constructive way of saving both your pocket and the planet, because diesels ingest little fuel and excrete little in the way of greenhouse gases. Modern diesels are quite quiet, too, and give a decent turn of speed.

Yet people have become increasingly aware that driving behind another diesel car is not pleasant, especially if you're feeling a bit cheery. Frankly, they smell, and even the cleanest of today's hi-tech diesels can be caught puffing out a big black cloud when asked to work hard. Research into whether or not diesel fumes constitute a health risk continues apace. Meanwhile, people are going right off the idea and slipping back into thirstier but faster and much less odorous petrol cars.

But what if we could combine the benefits of a diesel with the performance of a petrol engine? We'll soon be able to do exactly that if claims for the next big engine breakthrough prove correct. In Japan, Mitsubishi has just launched its GDI (Gasoline Direct Injection) engine in an all-new Galant, promising near-diesel economy with petrol-engine performance in terms of smoothness, quietness and ultimate pace.

Here's how it works. In a normal petrol engine, the petrol and the air have to be mixed in just the right proportions before they are sucked into the engine's cylinders, otherwise the mixture won't burn properly. Too little fuel, and the engine will splutter and misfire. In a diesel, however, the fuel is injected into the cylinder itself, just when the air already sucked in is being compressed to its maximum.

It's the heat generated by this compression that ignites the fuel, the expanding gases then forcing the piston down and making the engine go. The fuel starts to burn before it's fully dispersed among the compressed air, so it doesn't matter that there's more air than is chemically "correct".

So how would it be if petrol could be squirted directly into a cylinder, diesel-fashion, just at the microsecond it's needed? That's what happens in the Mitsubishi engine, thanks to advances in electronics that have made control of timing and quantity precise enough to match a higher-revving petrol engine's needs. As in a diesel, there's an excess of air, but clever shaping of the channel through which the incoming air enters the cylinder, and of the top of the piston, causes that air to swirl in such a way as to guide the squirt of petrol towards the spark plug. The plug ignites the petrol and gets the burning under way before the mixture is too dispersed.

Running like this, the new engine is very economical indeed: a true "lean-burn" motor. If its driver demands more power, though, perhaps for accelerating harder or cruising at high speed, the fuel is instead injected in greater quantity, to mimic what happens in a standard petrol engine. Even then, Mitsubishi's engine is still highly efficient thanks to that swirling and a high compression ratio.

Theory is one thing, practice quite another, and your sceptical correspondent expected there to be a definite "step" between the two modes of operation. Also, given the lifeless feel of simpler, less-burn engines to date (Honda Civic VTEC-E, Toyota Carina E), I would not have been surprised if the GDI engine felt as flat as a pancake. Not so: not only does this 1.8 litre engine feel entirely normal all the time, it's also encouragingly muscular and entirely smooth.

The new Galant that I tested, a Rover 600-sized car, comes to the UK soon but not, at first, with the new engine. That's because there's still some emissions work to do on matching it to European driving conditions with their higher sustained speeds. However, both the Mitsubishi Carisma and the Volvo S40, which are built in the same Dutch factory, will get the new engine by the end of the year.

The future, looks likely to lie with Gasoline Direct Injection, so it's hardly surprising that Mitsubishi has taken out 180 patents. Toyota is poised to launch its own version, and others are sure to follow. What price a smelly diesel now?

Thoroughbred: the spirit of James Dean's Spyder lives on in the Porsche Boxster, which harnesses its horsepower to soak up scenery at an alarming rate

PHOTOGRAPH: ADRIAN DENNIS

Roadtest: Porsche Boxster By Gavin Green

Rebel with a cause

The worst thing about the Porsche Boxster is that there was a better one a few years ago. At the 1993 Detroit Show, Porsche showed a delightful concept car, that looked like today's machine but was studded with jewel-like details, not least a gorgeous part-alloy cabin complete with instruments which would do justice to any upmarket watch face.

Alas, the production Boxster, just on sale in the UK, has a very dull cabin that is made out of the grimmest plastics Porsche could find. There are no elegant little fripperies, which pepper the rival Mercedes SLK's cabin. Even the switches look and feel rather naïf, and are sited with all the ergonomic planning of shot fired from a blunderbuss.

Mind you, after a few miles

Porsche Boxster: £33,950. Flat-six cylinder engine, 204bhp at 6000rpm, two-seater, mid-engine convertible sports car. Top speed 149mph, 0-60mph in 6.8 seconds, average fuel consumption 27mpg. Rivals Mercedes SLK: £30,090. Cheaper, more beautiful, better made and just as fast. But the SLK is not as sporty as the Porsche and its supercharged four-cylinder engine sounds flat. Automatic transmission only in Britain. BMW Z3 2.8: About £26,500. Another highly desirable new German convertible, but looks a bit toy-like and not as stimulating to drive as the Boxster. TVR Chimera: £30,650. Beautiful, brutish, fast and noisy. But can't compete with the Germans for refinement, comfort, reliability or build quality.

in the Boxster, you probably won't care too much. The little Porsche is such a hoot to drive and so stunning to look at that the cheapie cabin is soon dismissed. Instead, you'll savour the bellow of the gutsy flat-six engine, a foot or so behind your ears, and the marvellous agility.

Like all the best sports cars, the Boxster feels alive, hyperactive, eager. And like all other pricier Porsche models, it feels solid and meaty when you drive it hard. The steering is heavy, even though it's power assisted, and the little short-throw gearchange and pedals have firm, precise actions, too.

The Boxster replaces the old 968 model as Porsche's entry-level machine. It costs just £33,950, and that's cheap for a Porsche. Unlike the old 968, the Boxster has a mid-mounted engine, is a full convertible, and is very much more distinctive both to look at and to drive. It's an attempt by Porsche to go back to its roots and to cast off any criticism of making cars that look like Japanese coupés, but cost twice as much.

The Boxster harks back to the Fifties and to delightful Porsches such as the 550 Spyder. The Boxster's mid-engine layout, open top, lowness, long nose, headlamp and taillight shapes are reminiscent of the famous James Dean sports car, as is the big central rear exhaust pipe.

The old Spyder was a very minimalist, raw, noisy car. The Boxster still has a subversive streak—it's fast, low and noisy, too—but today's Porsche customers want their comforts. The seats are electrically controlled, there's central locking, power windows and an electrically operated hood.

You can even specify an automatic gearbox, in the form of Porsche's novel Tiptronic S, which enables you to choose between full automatic mode or DIY gearchanging courtesy of Formula One-type steering wheel buttons. It is such a good transmission that you sacrifice little in performance or fun compared with standard five-speed manuals.

Then again, low-rent cabin notwithstanding, you sacrifice so little with this car, compared with £50,000-plus Ferraris, that there's little point in spending any more. The Boxster is a rebel with a cause—to rewrite the sports car rulebook. After the Boxster, there's just no point in paying any more.

motoring

Motor Services

Did you Breakdown last year?

NO

Then save money with RESCUE AUTONATIONAL

The breakdown service with a 25% Bonus
Car Rescue from £24
Total Superservice from £49.50

LocalCall Brochure Line
— 0645 100 345 —

To join ring
0645 755 000

Please send me a FREE brochure

Fax: 01277 200716 Anytime

Name _____

Address _____

Postcode: _____ Phone: _____

Expiry Date of Current Cover _____

Send to: Autonational Rescue, FREEPOST CL 266, Brentwood, Essex CM14 4YW

Mobile Phones

NEW LOWER PRICE
Orange phones from only £9.99

RECEIVE A FREE...
ONE MONTHS FREE LINE RENTAL ON TALK 60

- Leather case
- In-car charger
- Spare battery
- Rapid home charger
- Itemised billing
- Answer service
- Delivery
- Insurance
- 3 year warranty
- 14 day trial

CONNECT TO ANY TALK PLAN AND RECEIVE ALL THE ABOVE ITEMS FREE

For more information, call MOBILEexpress on FREEPHONE: 0500 626500

MOBILEexpress

157 Southend Road, Grays
Essex RM17 5NP
Tel: 01473 330951 Fax: 01473 330952

Registration Numbers

MARKET RESEARCH
33 DAISY HILL DRIVE, CHORLEY PR6 0NE
13 AA	3,850	FAZ 122	1,000
835 ALX	1,350	JA PCA	985
145B	1,950	JS 983	3,550
335 BAX	POA	KT 272	2,000
728 BLU	750	KAB 120	1,000
4700 BWH	4,000	KDL 422	950
908 B	5,250	LEO 307	1,250
CF 383	2,000	LEO 307	1,250
CUE 621	500	LEO 307	1,250
CHG 4	3,500	LEO 307	1,250
944 DEL	1,250	LEO 307	1,250
440 DE	2,000	LEO 307	1,250
788 DEB	950	LEO 307	1,250
488 DP	1,800	LEO 307	1,250
EL 33	1,250	LEO 307	1,250
EX 783	1,400	LEO 307	1,250
62 EPO	500	LEO 307	1,250
943 ETU	500	LEO 307	1,250

PHONE 01257 943305 PHONE 01257 943305 FAX 01257 943305 FAX 01257 943305

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

MAZDA

SAAB

THE INDEPENDENT SNOWDROPS IN THE GREEN

100 bulbs for just £8.95

Snowdrops (Galanthus nivalis) are a must for the early Spring garden. Now is the time to plant them whilst the leaves are still green. They are ideal for planting under deciduous trees or shrubs and complement Winter aconites and cyclamens. They should be planted 2" deep with some coarse sand or grit worked into the soil. Soon after planting it is quite normal for them to die back. Left undisturbed they will naturalise forming large clumps and will give pleasure for many years to come.

How to order

By (0121) 427 3958 for the 24-hour credit card order service, please quote INGS08 when ordering. OR fill in the coupon quoting your Access/Visa number or send with crossed cheque/PO, NO CASH please to: THE INDEPENDENT SNOWDROP OFFER, P.O. BOX 807, HARBOR, MIDDLESEX, HA1 2YH

We deliver to addresses in the UK only. Offer subject to availability. Please allow 28 days for delivery.

Registered in England 1508957 NEWSPAPER PUBLISHING PLC

Please send — Coll Snowdrops @ £8.95 per 100 bulbs. I enclose my cheque/PO (Address on back) made payable to: Newspaper Publishing INGS08, or please debit my Access/Visa/Mastercard account with the sum of £

My card number is

Please use BLOCK CAPITALS. Expiry date

Name (Mr/Mrs/Ms/Ms)

Address

Postcode

Signature

Orders to: The Independent Snowdrop Offer, P.O. BOX 807, HARBOR, MIDDLESEX, HA1 2YH

Please tick this box if you do not wish to receive future mailings from Newspaper Publishing plc or from companies approved by NEWSPAPER PUBLISHING PLC

ING08

Luxury Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

Herbal...

homes & money

PEPS
FIVE PAGES OF ADVICE TO MAKE YOU RICHER
PAGES 26-30

Thee of the best Local landmarks

The Causeway Cottage Tea Rooms is in Fincham, north Essex, which was home to the late Dodie Smith, author of 101 Dalmatians. It's a picture-book English village, with ducks, old church and cottage gardens. The Grade II-listed Tea Rooms, overlooking the village pond and green, has traded for 40 years and is a magnet for touring cyclists in summer. Not surprising, as the tea rooms serves morning coffee and afternoon tea with home-made cakes and sandwiches. The owner's quarters include two bedrooms with potential for a third small one. For sale as a going concern through Trembach Welch (01371 872117) for £150,000.

Number 3-5 The Square in East Morton, in the Aire Valley, two miles from Bingley in West Yorkshire, currently operates as the village fish-and-chip shop in one half of the 17th-century building, and Jacques Cottage Antiques in the other. However, there is outline planning permission for conversion to either two character homes, or one large house (though what would the village do without its cod and chips?). Grade II listed, it stands at the head of the village square. Delightful country walks are promised and access to Wharfedale. £80,000 through Simon Thornton (01943 816213).

Until recently, the tiny thatched building opposite "Swallows Meet" in Cove-ton, south Devon, was the village Post Office. Now both properties are being sold as one, with the potential to turn the old PO into a guest annex. The Grade II-listed, whitewashed thatched house is built of stone and cob and has been extensively renovated; the sitting room has a flagstone floor, painted beams and wood-burning stove. £185,000 through Marchand Petit (01548 857588).

Rosalind Russell

Take cover before the blitz

Who will pay your mortgage if you can't? Nic Cicutti offers advice

It never happens to you. Others may lose their jobs, have accidents or be forced out of work through illness, but not you. Until it happens, of course.

When it does, you begin to wonder how you will be able to maintain your mortgage payments, pay other household bills and keep a roof over your head.

Despite this week's 68,000 fall in the number of those out of work, hundreds of thousands of people still join the dole queue each year, even if for a short while.

Andrew Walbank, an architect, is one of them. Unlike many, however, after losing his job recently he is waiting to hear from Skipton Building Society whether mortgage payments of £200 a month for his home in Ilkley, North Yorkshire, will be met by a special insurance policy he has.

If the payments are met, it will be the second time in just over two years that Mr Walbank has used his policy. In 1995, he was also made redundant. Then, the Skipton policy paid his home loan for 12 months.

Mr Walbank, who has experience in many areas of architecture, says: "I decided when I bought this place in 1990 that I wanted some protection. This relieves you of the pressure and responsibility of worrying about what happens when you are out of work. Despite the jobless total reaching record levels earlier this decade, accident, sickness and unemployment insurance, so-called ASU cover, was until recently taken out by barely 25 per cent of mortgage borrowers.

A large part of the reason was that up to two years ago, borrowers knew that mortgage interest benefits from the state would be paid if their lost their jobs. In fact, all it took was a two-month wait plus four more when half the interest was paid.

Another reason was the high cost. For people to be covered cost about £7 per £100 of monthly mortgage payments. Cover for a typical £50,000 loan might cost £25 a month.

But since October 1995, new borrowers must wait nine months before income support will meet their mortgage payments.

Today, a Halifax spokeswoman says: "We have seen an increase in the number of people taking out the cover, up to one third of new borrowers since the rules were changed."

"We don't want to force-feed people. All we can do is point out that it is there and that it can be useful. But there is a fine line involved."

One major factor in making such policies more popular has been the reduction in the cost of cover. Halifax's cover now costs £4.98 per £100 of monthly mortgage payments.

As with many policies, cover kicks in after a person has been out of work for 30 days although 180 days must elapse from the time the policy first started before a person is eligible for benefits. However, sickness or accidents ensure immediate payment, which last for up to 12 months.

Skipton Building Society believes in the product so much that it offers free unemployment cover to all its new borrowers and charges about £4 per £100 to extend the policy.

Gerry Dupree, an independent financial adviser in Gloucester whose company, Gerry Dupree & Co, specialises in mortgage advice, says he makes a point of recommending the cover to all his clients.

"The way we work is that we do not sell the same policy to all our clients," Mr Dupree says. "They all have different needs and requirements. Some will just need redundancy cover, because they have adequate sickness provision in their contracts. By making it cheaper, we make it more attractive." His company belongs to Mortgage Intelligence, a network of 400 home loans specialists, who can negotiate special deals on their clients' behalf.

Philip Watson, a director at John Charcol, the UK's largest mortgage broker, also believes strongly in the product: "There is a tendency to assume that if you lose your job the state will step in. In fact, 80 per cent of people do not qualify for benefits."

Andrew Walbank twice relied on mortgage insurance

PHOTOGRAPH BY SMITH & JONES

Also, people forget that this kind of cover is not just about unemployment. About 60 per cent of our claims are for accidents and sickness."

John Charcol too uses a number of different insurance companies to meet its clients' needs. "We need to be able to ensure that you get what's right, whether a person is a steepjack or an office worker."

Mr Walbank isn't either of those. But he says: "I cannot speak too highly of this insurance. Even when I find work again, I shall still continue my payments towards it." John Charcol: 0800 930393 Mortgage Intelligence: 0800 246000

TEL: 0171 293 2222

property • residential

FAX: 0171 293 2505

To Let

Luxury in The city

Herbal Hill Gardens, Clerkenwell EC1

A Selection of Luxury Apartments Available to Let, Situated Within Walking Distance of The Financial Centre of London.

Facilities Include:
Two Bedrooms, Two Bathrooms With High Standard Specification
Fully Fitted Kitchen with Full Range of Integrated Neff Appliances Impressive Marble Entrance Lobby
Residents Swimming Pool, Jacuzzi, Sauna and Gym
Residents Porter
Secured Underground Car Park & Gardens.

The Apartments Available Furnished or Unfurnished.
Also Two Remaining Penthouses Available With Stunning City Views.

Prices From £325 to £525 Per Week
For Viewing Appointment Contact:
0171-837 4035

Cambridge

PRIME RESIDENTIAL ACCOMMODATION
UNRIVALED CITY CENTRE LOCATION

PETERSFIELD MAISONNETTES

PRESTIGIOUS
PENTHOUSE APARTMENTS
PRICES FROM £260,000

- SECURE UNDERGROUND PARKING •
- LUXURY SPECIFICATION •
- AWARD WINNING NHBC •
- 50 MINUTES TO KINGS CROSS BY TRAIN •

FOR IMMEDIATE VIEWING PLEASE CONTACT
(01638) 663433

DENCORA HOMES

DENCORA HOUSE, 84-86 ALL SAINTS ROAD, NEWMARKET CB8 8HF
FAX: (01638) 664284

Overseas Property

OVERSEAS MORTGAGE FINANCE

The most competitive interest rate? What are the most suitable mortgage terms? For details of our complete service in Europe & the USA contact:

CONTI FINANCIAL SERVICES
(Licensed Credit Brokers)
FREEPHONE: 0800 018 2811
Fax: 01273 725789

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT.

FLORIDA

We offer a superb selection of luxury homes at reasonable prices in beautiful locations in Orlando, New Port Richey and Venice.

• 3 bed 2 bath home with 2200 sq ft kitchen with all appliances on Golf Course Development
$124,000

• 80% Mortgage Available

• Golf Course Developments

• Waterfront Homes

• Country Club Locations

SEE US ON STAND 39 AT THE OVERSEAS PROPERTY SHOW
TEL: 01432 255599
FAX: 01432 255575

Italy

LUCCA CENTRO STORICO 2
Three apartments 2 bedrooms each. Tel: 0158 25008 25009

WELSH TIMESHARE from £595

END OF PROJECT SAVE £1000

UK QUALITY TIMESHARE FOR LESS THAN BOUTIQUE PRICES

All purchases security backed out on site using a UK High Street Bank as Trustee. Buying in the UK means you can enjoy the highest Exchange value (Points RCI) and use what you're buying. Enjoy the very best luxury holidays for a fraction of the cost of package tours. Diving in the UK means exchanging from a safe base to all the dream locations you want.

• Thrills & Sunning pool • Sauna • Solarium

• Fishing (fish or fly) • Riding (dress or children's play park)

• Seven acres of private grounds • Comfortable private bar

Care Cinema (grounded Cinema Cinema) is a uniquely beautiful resort founded 3 years ago, in the heart of the Welsh valleys. 30 minutes drive from the Ebbw Vale Resorts.

RCI Resort of International Destination - placing our resort in the top 15% of resorts worldwide.

For details call between 9am - 5pm
01597 825352 Fax 860646

French Chateau Llanelli Four Bedded Villa, Pwllheli.

FRENCH PROPERTY EXHIBITION

7TH, 8TH, 9TH MARCH 1997

THE SOLELYL CONFERENCE & BANQUETING CENTRE, HOMER ROAD, SOUTHILL, BIRMINGHAM B15 2JN

0121 717 1111

COSTA BLANCA

2 BED BUNGALOWS FROM £24,500
DETACHED VILLAS FROM £36,800

FOR THE BEST FREEHOLD PROPERTIES AT THE BEST PRICES, CONTACT

MERCERS 01491 574 807
24 HOURS

COSTA CALIDA

Auctions

Saturday 22nd February

"Houses under the Hammer"

In next Saturday's 'The Long Weekend' we shall be investigating the forthcoming property auctions up and down the U.K. As the property market develops in 1997 how are auctions being affected by the changes?

To advertise or receive further information please call the property team on:

0171 293 2302/ 2343

Kent

CANTERBURY

1 mile Cathedral.
University side.
Unusual detached, single storey house. Inner patio with acacia shrubs, 4 beds, 2 reception, 14'x12' and 19'x22' with central hearth and clerestory windows. 0.25 acre garden. Carport. G.F. central heating.

£158,000.

For info phone 01734 413285

To advertise in this section please call the Property Team on 0171 293 2302/2844

South of the River

ARGYLL MARCH

LANDLORDS

Argyll March are an independent family firm dedicated to providing a top quality letting service to our clients.

FREE advice FREE market appraisal
All viewings accompanied by our helpful staff.

TENANTS

An example of the quality properties we have to offer:
Telegraph Hill, New Cross SE14 £1,200 p.m.
A substantial Victorian family home offering five bedrooms and three reception. Available as fully furnished with quality pieces including four poster bed and upright piano. Fully fitted kitchen with dishwasher, washing machine and dryer. Many original features throughout. Stipped boards to living room. Attractive rear garden. Gas central heating. Available mid February 1997. One month rent in advance and one month rent deposit. No DSS please.

34 East Dulwich Road SE22 9AX
Tel: 0171 207 2700

ESTATE AGENTS • LETTINGS • SURVEYORS • VALUERS

London Property

SELECT HOMES FOR THE OVER FIFTIES

LONDON NW5

Designed for retirement

- 2 bed Houses from £149,500
- 1 bed Flats, many with study, from £89,500
- Secure courtyard development
- 1/2 mile to Hampstead Heath & Belsize Park
- Showhouse & Showflat open Thurs-Mon 11.00-5.00

Wordsworth Place
contact: John Johnson
0171 428 0335

John Howell & Co

Solicitors & International lawyers

The specialists in Spain

Why us?

- We have over 10 years' experience dealing with hundreds of cases throughout Spain.
- We do nothing but work related in Spain.
- We have our own London based abogados.
- All our lawyers and secretaries are bilingual.
- You have the security of dealing with fully insured English solicitors.

17 Maiden Lane
Covent Garden
London WC2E 7NA

Tel: 0171 420 0400 Fax: 0171 836 3636

18 Associate Offices throughout Spain

Outwardly mobile

Where are the pioneers in the London space race buying?
By Penny Jackson

In all parts of London, families are giving up fashionable postcodes for a large house and even larger savings. At the back of their minds, though, there is always the niggles that during the recession prices in these outlying areas fell fastest and hardest. Even though recovery in some pockets of east and south London is still slow, places with a good stock of solid family houses are seeing rapid growth. Yolande Barnes of Savills Research likens the market to a rising tide; when it retreats it will not go back to the same point and new areas become established.

In the Eighties, Battersea was swept into a new price bracket and it is from this area people are now pushing south in search of more space for their money. Ms Barnes believes real pioneers should be looking towards Lewisham and New Cross, with its beautiful squares near Goldsmith's College and, further in, Paddington and Camberwell.

Winkworth, the London estate agents, has noticed an acceleration of the filter effect, which is a common feature of a rising, low volume market. As buyers move into secondary residential areas, prices are pushed up, creating an exodus of purchasers into neighbouring value-for-money locations.

In west London, this trail may start in Kensington via Notting Hill to Shepherd's Bush where £300,000 would buy a good-sized family house; while those priced out of Hammersmith and Chiswick have discovered a few pockets of Acton with large homes at reasonable prices.

In south London, the enormous increase in prices in Battersea, in some cases 30 per cent over the past four months, is pushing buyers out of Wandsworth and Clapham towards Balham, Streatham and Tooting. A £400,000 house in the best roads in Streatham and on Tooting Common would cost £600,000 to £700,000 two miles away.

Yet precisely where you buy is important, says Simon Agace, chairman of Winkworth. The right ingredients must be there: community, architecture, transport and education. "Even if you overbid and buy into next year's appreciation area you are modestly safe but not in a tertiary area. In a boom market the gap narrows between the good and poor areas, in a recession it widens."

De Beauvoir, on the borders of Canonbury and Dalston, has the required architecture to raise it above some of its struggling east London neighbours. Price-sensitive house-hunters in Islington and Highbury are finding their money goes much further. Instead of paying around half a million for a large Victorian house, they are not likely to be stretched beyond £320,000 here.

In the leafy, outlying areas, places such as Dulwich and Muswell Hill, solid and traditional residential spots, are newly fashionable. Some half-a-million pounds is a good starting point for a large family house close to Hampstead, whereas a few miles out in increasingly popular Crouch End, that figure would be reduced to about half.

In the leafy south-east, Blackheath, with its open spaces and genuine village feel, is seeing price rises of 3 to 4 per cent a month. The spill-over of buyers has narrowed the gap between the adjoining Lee conservation area and the heart of the village. A house valued at £190,000 last year is now selling at £255,000.

The Greenwich peninsula is an area full of potential, according to Yolande Barnes, who sees Greenwich offering a better quality of environment than the ever-popular Fulham. "You can pay three times more for safety, or ideally start a trend which could change the nature of an area. Good houses need pioneers."

Acton
5 bedroom family home
£245,000

Crouch End
7 bedroom family home
£339,950

Streatham
8 bedroom family home
£295,000

Blackheath
4 bedroom semi-detached
£249,950

Details supplied by Winkworth estate agent
Graphic: Julian Saul

Mortar, mortar everywhere

... but just try buying somewhere to live in central London. Mary Dejevsky did – and failed

It never seems the right time to want to buy a flat in central London, but now seems an especially wrong time. Even with cash in hand, nothing to sell, and the most pressing desire to buy – not to make money, but to have somewhere to live – you attract more sympathy than enthusiasm from the capital's estate agents.

Either (in the case of W1, WC1, SW1) there is nothing on their books because no one is selling. "We didn't even bother to compile a list for January," they say. "There's nothing coming in." Or (W8, SW3, SW5) everyone is run off their feet showing flats around the clock. If you ring, there is no one in the office because they're all out with clients.

Any half-habitable flat is said to be "flying out of the window" even before anyone has had time to type out the details. "We're just so busy. It's wonderful for us," confided one receptionist against a cacophony of ringing phones. It's not so wonderful for us.

On the surface, London seems to be back in the vicious circle of 1988: too little to buy, too many people chasing after it and everyone well into gazumping mode. Perhaps it is worse. Last time, there was a temporary and quite specific reason for the frenzy: the new restrictions on mortgage interest tax relief. The bubble soon burst.

This time, the common wisdom is that we are experiencing the biggest boom since the late Seventies. Interestingly, a dissenting voice comes from the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors whose spokeswoman gives a number of reasons why an enduring boom is unlikely: the cautious budget, the election, a probable reduction in MIRAS and no change in stamp duty.

Estate agents and vendors understandably prefer the boom theory, which helps to explain our problems as buyers. Why should anyone sell their flat when they can expect another 15 per cent for it next year? And if they do sell, why should they settle for anything less than a price that anticipates that rise? Whether people are prepared to buy at any price, just to have a stake in the supposedly rising market, is another matter. After a long weekend of concentrated flat viewing in central London, I was left with the suspicion that the current "boom" may be artificially fuelled by some estate agents and vendors and that it is not a real reflection of the market.

The agents concerned will object that the market drives itself, that any flat is worth just as much or as little as someone is prepared to pay for it, and that there is a real shortage of properties. All that is true. But it takes a genuine bidding situation and genuine information to judge what is a fair price, and not the feeble imaginings of the sale-hungry.

Taken to see a couple of flats last week that were still being renovated and not yet on the market, we were told that if we wanted to make an offer, "think of a number, the price hasn't been set yet".

We were effectively invited to take part in an auction with no reserve and no guide price. That's how hot the competition is supposed to be.

At another flat, also being renovated but advanced enough to have an asking price (though no printed details), we were told: "We've already had an offer at the asking price, but we haven't accepted it." The renovator (and owner) muttered in the background that he thought the asking price too high.

Some agents are shamelessly encouraging gazumping. I was taken to see two flats in one block. One, at what seemed a very reasonable price, was under offer. The other, which seemed overpriced by comparison, was not. To the agent's horror, a family was waiting in the lobby (the family, it transpired, that thought it had bought the first flat). I was whisked past, rushed to the flat in question, raced around it (to be gone before the family arrived to measure up), then taken to the other flat.

A justification for this comedy might be the usefulness of comparing the size and price of the two flats. But the subsequent conversation contained a strong invitation to bid for the first flat, with the asking price "as a floor". Maybe the agent thought that the buyer, who wanted several flats in the block, would either increase his offer or switch to the more expensive flat – to the mutual benefit of agent and vendor.

The saga has a sequel. We made an offer for the larger flat, which was rejected. Spun tales of spiralling prices, vicious bidding for other flats in the area (but not for this one), we upped the offer. A misdirected fax subsequently made clear that, first, this was 10 per cent more than any similar flat in the block had ever fetched and, second, that the price had recently been de facto increased by the removal from the package of several parking spaces (hitherto included in the same price).

We withdrew; the vendor, a company, is prepared to wait. But the experience prompts some thoughts.

Perhaps the statutory duty on estate agents to provide accurate particulars should be augmented with a requirement to state when a flat was put on the market, at what price and on what terms. Ideally, the prices achieved at sale should be published, as they are in some countries. Then we buyers could judge the market for ourselves and not find ourselves unwittingly driving it.

And, contrary to what you may hear, there are central London flats on the market. Some of them have been there for a good many months now, unsold because of their poor condition, their high service charge or their less than ideal location. They are available because sellers and agents will not reduce the price, anticipating that the market will "rise to meet them". Maybe it will, but the fact that buyers are resisting shows that we still have a modicum of common sense.

Beyond the city limits

The London commuter strays a fair distance these days. Although the traditional stockbroker belt will always be prime territory for anyone who has to be at their desk sharpish, five days a week, flexible working, technology and improved transport links have allowed many people to go further afield.

Alison Dean, a director of estate agents Savills, has noticed that the received wisdom of a one-and-a-half-hour, door-to-door cut-off point has polarised: some commuters want to be at work within 45 minutes, others are prepared to travel for up to two hours. The three-day office week, with increasing numbers of people working partly from home, has made the long commute acceptable. "We find that if both partners work, the choice is to stay closer in. A couple will often move further out when the woman, say, decides to work part-time or from home," she says.

Clearly, improved rail and road links have opened up new areas. Only now is the effect of the electrification of the eastern line from King's Cross to Peterborough, a 45-minute trip, being felt. Rutland and Norfolk, very much second-home territory, are now becoming thinkable for regular commuters.

"Car travel is dead time, but people can get through a lot of work on the train. Regular commuters learn the tricks of the trade. They know where to stand on the platform to get a seat and how to stagger their journeys," says Alison Dean. Jim Ward, an analyst at Savills, lives in Cambridge and works in London. "We live in the heart of the city so I can cycle to the station. I spend an hour on the train and that is very useful time for reading and planning. Quite a few people use laptops. In that sense it is better to be an hour away than have a journey of half an hour while you are squashed into a carriage unable to do anything." It costs him just over £3,000 a year in fares but, he says, is worth it for the quality of life Cambridge affords.

The equation of moving out of London and saving money does not always add up. There is a premium to pay for homes in pretty Hampshire towns that have a fast rail service and the Surrey commuter belt is more expensive than many parts of London. But the northern London commuter belt is cheaper than Surrey. In Enfield, 19 miles from Peterborough, Savills is selling a Georgian school house for £185,000, which would be closer to £300,000 in Surrey. And a 17th-century house in the village of Wilby, two miles from Wellingborough, with a 50-minute run into St Pancras, has a guide price of £565,000, while in Surrey it would be between £700,000 and £800,000. Winchester, which 10 years ago was regarded as an outpost of commuter land, is a 55-minute journey to Waterloo. Mary-Anne Crafter, PR manager for Hamptons International, is a regular passenger. "Working on the train is the equivalent of three hours in the office. I can focus and am uninterrupted. It does get stressful if the trains are mucked about. I can only do it because my husband works locally and I have a brilliant nanny."

Ty Homes' development and refurbishment of Peninsula Barracks, in the centre of Winchester, has seen a number of young professional buyers. At the beginning of March, five homes in the last side of the square will be ready. The race is on between the empty-nesters and those with their eyes on the non-stop link to Waterloo.

Penny Jackson

TEL: 0171 293 2222

property • residential

FAX: 0171 293 2505

Services

Why wait to move house to pay less for contents insurance?

TRY US DIRECT ON 0800 444 777

A4 Home Insurance

Dependent on other factors. Premiums based on standard. Not for use in conjunction with other policies. Subject to underwriting. Specialist policies available on request. Homeowners Insurance Scheme Ltd is an independent intermediary governed by the FOS rules of conduct.

---

Putney

THE OLD RECTORY MARKET HARBOROUGH

NORTHANTS/LEICS BORDER
1627 Listed Rectory, edge Market Town, 7 beds, 4 reception and cons. 65 mins from London, 15 mins to city centre. Impressive and 21 acres including 1800sq ft Outbuildings, staff offices/annexe, 1 acre, stream.
£455,000
Tel: 01535 431229

---

Oxfordshire

OXFORDSHIRE SOMERTON O.R.O. £270,000

Suburban Village Property conversion from stable block, growing self level accommodation. 34 beds, 3 bedrooms in main, master bedroom with balcony. Employing for meeting venue. Double garage. Pretty village location. Reg 4032. Kidlington 01868 371616

Overseas Property

10,000+ PROPERTIES AND BUSINESSES FOR SALE IN OVER 100 LOCATIONS WITHIN 23 COUNTRIES

Bahamas, Canada, Cayman Islands, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Florida, France, Guad, Canary, Greece, Goa (India), Ireland, Italy, La Palma, Lanzarote, Majorca, Malta, Menorca, Portugal, South Africa, Spain, Tenerife, Turkey and Calicos Islands, United States of America.

PRICES FROM £12,000 - £10,000,000

NYRAS PROPERTIES (OVERSEAS)

Old Bank House, 1 High Street, Arundel, West Sussex BN18 9AD
Tel: +44 (0)1903 88 45 53 Fax: +44 (0)1903 73 25 54
Agents required worldwide

---

London Property

HURFORD SALVI CARR

CITY • BLOOMSBURY

A refreshing new approach to residential agency. Our sales particulars all carry a floor plan, square areas and estimated rental values. Call us now for a copy of our free 16-page colour Property Review featuring a selection of new developments including Loft.

Tel: 0171-250 1012 Fax: 0171-250 1015

37-41 St John Street, London EC1M 4AN

---

ULTRA VILLAS

Golf apartments from £27,500 and detached villas from £77,950. Other locations available on beach and inland locations. Telephone: 01242 221500 Est. since 1980

---

FRENCH PROPERTY NEWS

monthly, for your free copy telephone (0181) 947 1834

Sell your home for as little as £50 per advertisement

INDEPENDENT ON SUNDAY

Advertise your property through the Independent on Sunday's highly successful Property Gallery; a marketplace that is tried, tested and works. The advertisement appears in the module format shown here, with 40 words of copy complemented by a full colour photograph of your home.

The Cost

The more Sundays you book, the cheaper the cost per ad -

1 x Sunday advertisement costs £95

2 x Sunday advertisements cost £130 (£65 each)

3 x Sunday advertisements cost £150 (£50 each)

Fill in the coupon below and send payment, a colour photograph and up to 40 words of copy to: The Property Team, Classified Advertising, 19th Floor, Independent Newspaper, 1 Canada Square, Canary Wharf, London E14 5DL

Deadline for receipt of copy/photo is the Tuesday 12 days prior to Sunday publication. Offer open to private advertisers only. commercial advertising package available on request.

NAME..... TELEPHONE (daytime).....

ADDRESS.....

I require ☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 (tick appropriate box) Sunday Advertisement(s) at a total cost of £.....

Please enclose a cheque for this amount made payable to 'Newspaper Publishing Plc' or fill in your Visa/Access/Amex/Debit details:

CREDIT CARD NO..... EXPIRY DATE..... SIGNATURE.....

For advice or more information please call 'The Property Team' on 0171-293 2343 or 0171-293 2302

---

NR LEICESTER

Immaculate three bed apartment in former Highgate Lodge 14 miles (on A1) from city centre. Full planning consent for conversion to residential. Spacious lounge with fireplace, luxurious kitchen with granite worktop, large master bedroom, large bathroom, small detached garden, garage. £74,950 o.n.o. Day: 0171 293 2343

150 من الاموال

Beyond the city limits

For a moment – just one brief, tantalising moment – it looked as though there was going to be a large shock in the investment stakes this year. When the WM Company, which monitors fund managers' performance, took its first pass at analysing how well pension funds had done with their investments in 1996, it found what looked like startling evidence.

It seemed that those funds which were "actively managed" had come out on top again in the performance stakes.

The early returns suggested that while the FT All-share index last year produced a total return of 16.8 per cent, the average actively managed pension fund had achieved a return of 17.2 per cent, a small but significant advantage.

If confirmed, it would have meant that professional fund managers collectively had beaten the main stock market index for only the third time in the last 10 years. But alas, for the industry's self-

Why the markets outperform the professionals' managed funds most years

Jonathan Davis

esteem, the first cut proved to be a false signal. A month on, there has been time to collect and analyse the performance data further, and now the figures have had to be revised. WM, which monitors results from 80 per cent of the pension funds in this country, now calculates that the outcome last year was a dead heat. The pension funds in its survey produced a return of 16.8 per cent – exactly the same as the index itself had produced.

In historical terms, this was still quite an achievement. For ever since professional fund managers started to analyse their performance in detail (which was not all that long ago), the message has almost invariably been the same. In any one year, the majority of professional fund managers are incapable of beating the main stock market indices.

And if that were not bad enough, the chances of any fund manager beating the index repeatedly over a period of years are much slimmer still.

The evidence on this point, as I have had cause to mention here before, is quite incontrovertible. Every study that has been carried out into fund management performance, whether it is in the United States or here, and whether it is pension funds, unit trusts, investment trusts or whatever, arrives at roughly the same conclusion. This is that around 80 per cent of professionally managed funds will underperform the market as a whole each year.

WM's own data shows that 1992 was the only year in the last 10 when pension funds actually made a return greater than that of the index (though in 1994, they did manage to produce a smaller negative return than the index).

If you look at studies of individual fund management performance over time, the evidence is similarly clear-cut. Fund managers who appear in the top 25 per cent of performers in any five or 10-year period are more likely than not to be in the bottom half in the succeeding five or 10-year period. In fact, there is some evidence to support the view that picking the worst performing fund management group is just as likely to produce above average performance in the future.

Credit for the first discovery of this painful truth about the fund management business is probably owed to a distinguished American philanthropist, Alfred Cowles, who demonstrated as long ago as 1933 that the returns achieved by insurance companies were no better or no worse than those which would have been generated by a randomly selected portfolio of stocks. But it has taken the advent of modern computers to demonstrate conclusively quite how persistent and relentless this phenomenon is.

When you think about it, of course, this finding is really not as surprising as it may seem. Fund managers collectively are the market, so it is inevitable that collectively they should be unable to beat the market index. The main reason they persistently fail even to match it, however, lies in the cost of their doing business – their management fees on the one hand and all the money they put into the pockets of stockbrokers when they buy and sell the shares in their portfolio.

While the average fund manager cannot beat the stock market, many individual fund managers can – and do. In the pension fund field, the top quartile of performers typically produce a return that is between 2 per cent and 6 per cent greater than the market as a whole.

Something similar happens in the unit trust and investment trust industry, although most cases of outperformance are due more to the particular sector or country that the trust has chosen to invest in, rather than the stock selection skills of the manager in question.

What is odd is that it has taken so long for investors to arrive at the obvious conclusion – that it may not be worth trying to beat the stock market index any more. Naturally, everybody wants to see their fund in the top half of the performance tables – pension fund trustees are just as dogmatic about that as the average investor. But is it sensible to set that as a target? As there is now a practical alternative, in the shape of index-tracking funds, whose sole raison d'être is to mimic the returns on the index, without any pretensions to beating the market averages, the question needs careful consideration.

Not for nothing do WM now estimate that between 20 per cent and 25 per cent of pension fund money is now "passively" managed – ie invested in index-tracking funds. In the United States, the figure is more like 40 per cent. It is the inevitable consequence of taking a long, hard look at the facts of past performance.

Now that ordinary investors have a chance to put their money into an index-tracking fund too – there are already nearly a dozen such funds in this country – the question to ask is not whether you should think about them as an investor, but why you should even think of opting for anything else.

The cat's share tips

Paul Slade opens the lid on a feline financier's portfolio

Had you been standing in my kitchen on 13 August last year, you would have found me carefully laying out pieces of dry cat food on to a grid of 250 numbered squares.

Despite appearances, there was a point to this. When the grid was complete I let a cat named Schrödinger loose in the kitchen and noted the 35 pieces which he ate first. These numbers, matched up against a list of shares in the FTSE mid-250, went to make up what I call the Consolidated Accumulation Trust portfolio – or CAT, for short.

The shares which Schrödinger selected included household names such as The Body Shop, Dalgety, Northern Foods, Rascal, Savoy Hotels and Taylor Walker. He also went for a few more adventurous picks such as media group Flextech, healthcare specialists ML Laboratories and Mercury World Mining, an investment trust.

As far as sector split is concerned, Schrödinger went for six investment trusts, three media companies, three construction companies, two engineering firms and two transport companies. Not to mention a smattering of power, drinks, distribution and financial services. A sample of the stocks he picked is given in the table alongside this article.

So, six months on, how are Schrödinger's skills as an investment manager holding up?

A friendly unit trust group – far too modest to have its name bandied around here – has put the portfolio on the computer for me, assuming an initial investment of £10,000 in each company's shares. For the purposes of this exercise, we've deducted a broker's commission of £1,053 at the outset, but ignored all other charges.

In the six months since its creation, CAT's value has grown by 3.05 per cent, against a figure of 4.06 per cent for the mid-250 index. But this conceals a dramatic upswing in the last quarter. In the three months to 4 February this year, the fund has grown by 4.4 per cent, nearly double the mid-250's advance of 2.3 per cent.

Even the six-month figures rank Schrödinger ahead of my real-life fund managers. It is not a foolproof comparison by any means, but Micropal's figures for UK Growth unit trusts over the same period (bid-to-bid, ignoring income) show the sector average at 10.1 per cent. CAT is ranked at 156 in a field of 164.

Among Schrödinger's big successes, other than his top-five selection, are also the Cowie Group, which saw its share price rise 15.9 per cent in the past six months, Taylor Woodrow, whose shares have benefited from the housing market recovery to the tune of 13.8 per cent, and Electra Investment Trust, up 11.8 per cent.

Admittedly, there are some poor selections. Bulmer Holdings is down 6.7 per cent, while Wimpey has dropped 6.2 per cent and Highland Distilleries shares have lost 3.9 per cent of their value in six months.

This still puts Schrödinger comfortably ahead of managers of trusts such as Barclays Unicorn Leisure (+4.3 per cent), Equitable Life Special Situations (+4.1 per cent), M&G Recovery (+3.8 per cent) and GT UK Growth (+3.5 per cent).

An M&G spokeswoman is unabashed at Schrödinger's success relative to her company's fund: "Don't be so catty," she retorts. "Our Recovery Fund has outperformed the FT All-share index over every 15-year period since its launch in 1969."

"If we were to hire Schrödinger as a fund manager after that kind of performance we might be faced with a large number of early redemptions from our fund."

It's still early days, of course, but I think we can consider that a reasonably promising start for our four-legged financier. We'll be returning to CAT every three months or so in the future to see how he's getting on.

Many investment plans, like Virgin's PEP, are based not on actively managed funds, but on "tracker trusts".

Trackers have the advantage of eliminating the risk that the market as a whole will go up, but your own fund manager's succeeds in picking the few stocks that are falling.

Active fund managers are relaxed about tracker trusts as most companies will have one in their selection of funds. How they will react to being outperformed by an investment expert whose only remuneration – unlike theirs – is the occasional tin of Sheba remains to be seen.

Schrödinger's investment performance
	Company	Sector	6-month change
1	Flextech	Media	+40.72%
2	United Friendly	Insurance	+28.4%
3	St James's Place	Financial	+26.6%
4	Flextech	Building materials	+19.4%
5	Northern Foods	Food	+16.4%
31	Spirax-Sarco	Engineering	-8.5%
32	Warrington Holdings	Paper & packaging	-8.7%
33	Rascal	Electronics	-11.3%
34	Mercury World Mining	Investment trust	-15.5%
35	ML Laboratories	Healthcare	-32.4%

ultimate tracking PEP?

- 25% invested internationally
- 75% invested in the UK
- Monthly savings from only £50 per month
- Lump sum investments from £1000

93 (local call only), quoting the reference below, between now in block capitals and return to (no stamp required) to: L. FREEPOST ANG 4247, Norwich NR1 3BR.

Name

Address

Postcode

Daytime tel no:

Evening tel no:

Data that you provide may be used by Norwich Union group companies, your financial adviser or other relevant organisations for marketing purposes such as market research and contacting you regarding your future insurance and investment needs.

NORWICH UNION

No one protects more.

Norwich Union Portfolio Services Limited is regulated by the Personal Investment Authority. Regulated by IMRO

ALL YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT PENSIONS

www.equitable.co.uk

Regulated by The Personal Investment Authority

PENSIONS BY PHONE

24 hours a day.... 7 days a week.... Now you can pick up the phone and get pensions information or advice and even set up a plan, quickly and without fuss.

0345 6789 10

or talk to your Independent Financial Adviser

SCOTTISH WIDOWS

For your protection, your calls to Scottish Widows may be recorded. Information or advice will only be provided on Scottish Widows products. Issued by Scottish Widows' Fund and Life Assurance Society, a mutual company. Regulated by the Personal Investment Authority.

Schemes to take away the pain of capital gains tax

John Whiting

Being landed with a large capital gains tax (CGT) bill can take some of the joy out of the gain you have made on a particular deal. As last week's article showed, there is a certain amount of basic planning that can be done to reduce the pain. But can we go further — can we find a fiscal Paul Daniels or David Copperfield who will magic away that tax bill altogether?

Oddly enough, the Inland Revenue itself offers a range of tricks to make the CGT bill disappear. Some of them involve accepting a bit of risk.

If you are willing to invest in an unquoted trading company, there is considerable scope for sheltering any gain. Firstly, reinvestment relief, which requires you to buy shares, or subscribe for new ones, in a qualifying company.

The key to "qualifying" is that it is a UK business, it trades (rather than invests in property, for example), doesn't do certain prohibited trades (including giving tax advice) and it is not quoted on the main Stock Exchange. A share listed on the Alternative Investment Market will qualify.

You have quite a long time scale to do the investment — one year before to three years after your disposal that, gave rise to the gain. And you only have to invest your gain — not the whole of the proceeds. You may not wish to reinvest direct — or may not find it easy to identify the right company. Fortunately, companies are increasingly getting Revenue approval under a new clearance scheme. A good investment adviser should have a few for you to consider.

Or you may wish to spread your risk. Venture capital trusts (VCTs) are springing up which offer opportunities for some income tax relief at 20 per cent on your investment. They also offer the chance to shelter the capital gain.

There is a £100,000 limit on how much you can invest in a year. Going a stage further, if you really have found the company you want to put your money into, and are willing to subscribe for new shares, the enterprise investment scheme allows you to get reliefs in the same way as a VCT.

All of these reliefs are geared to getting the taxpayer to put money into a riskier environment, channelling funds to companies that traditionally find it hard to attract finance.

Bear in mind that the gain that you have deferred will pop out when you sell the new investment — but the same opportunity for deferral may be there again, though whether the reliefs last under a change of government is an interesting question.

There is also an automatic and full relief that must not be forgotten. Retirement relief gives full relief for gains of up to £250,000 and half-relief on the balance of gains up to £1m. What do you have to do? Sell that business!

Most trading businesses qualify and — provided you have been fully involved for 10 years — you can expect very substantial relief. There are a lot of quirks, though, oddly, two key ones favour the taxpayer. First, you don't actually have to retire — you can keep working. Second, 50 is the normal qualifying threshold.

Overall, you can play fiscal magic and make your gain disappear, perhaps only for a while — but a gain deferred is no bad thing.

The catch is you have to do it carefully — there is always a risk you end up with a broken egg rather than a rabbit when you reach into the top hat to retrieve your investment.

John Whiting is a tax partner with Price Waterhouse.

Take care of No1

It is worth starting to plan for long-term care early, argues Nic Cicutti

Killjoy. That is the name used to describe someone who repeatedly spoils everyone's fun — such as referring to the possibility that at a late stage in many people's lives they may need help in looking after themselves. And pointing out that this care may prove highly expensive.

Even so, it is better to be a killjoy at times than to pretend that there is nothing to worry about when it comes to looking after oneself in old age.

The evidence points to the fact that we all live longer today than even a decade ago — up to the age of 80 and beyond, on average. Most of us will still be fit at that age. But some will require help with their daily living needs.

At present, the average costs of full-time care are about £17,000 a year, while the cost of care in one's own home can rise to £30,000 if two carers are needed.

Despite changes announced by the Chancellor in the November 1995 Budget, a local authority will only contribute totally to these costs if an individual's total assets are £10,000 or less. Anyone with assets of up to £16,000 is means-tested, while the entire cost of care is recouped by the local authority if assets are over that amount.

The cries of anger from many who discovered that their homes were calculated as assets led the Government not only to increase the lower limits before income was assessed from £6,000 to £10,000, as stated. It also provoked a promise to review the provision of long-term care funding, to see whether incentives could be given to people who are prepared to provide some form of private cover for themselves.

Last year, Stephen Dorrell, the Health Minister, proposed tax incentives to help out. For every £1 of insurance cover, an extra amount of assets can be kept on top of those already allowed.

If the "disregard" is £1.50 for every £1 of cover bought, a person would be able to protect £70,000 of assets before being means-tested.

Another variation floated last year would involve a policy being taken out for a limited period, say four years. In return, a higher amount of assets would be disregarded, say £25,000, plus an additional £1 for every £1 of cover taken.

David Aaron, an independent financial adviser at The Aaron Partnership in Milton Keynes, points out: "[These schemes] are aimed at people who are moderately wealthy, say owning a property worth £100,000, but not for those with more substantial wealth."

Nor are they much use to low-asset families, who will presumably continue to be means-tested and get relatively inferior nursing care because they cannot afford better.

In any event, a draft Bill on long-term care is due next week. However, given the proximity of a general election, there are doubts as to whether it will ever make it on to the Parliamentary slipway.

If reliance on the state to fund the cost of long-term care is increasingly less of an option, what are the alternatives? Mr Aaron suggests there are several.

The first is to maximise savings, possibly by adding to one's portfolio so that the funds can be used to pay for care when it is needed.

Although this is a helpful start, the cost of care can rapidly dissipate even large amounts of money.

Pensions also offer benefits, in that contributions to them are tax-deductible and the investments grow in a tax free environment. The problem is that most people do not fund enough to provide themselves with a decent income, let alone the extra needed to pay for care. Nevertheless, an increase in pension contributions is useful too.

Costly care: Planning is needed PHOTOGRAPH: STEVE MORGAN

At retirement, a lump sum is often paid as part of a pension. This can be used to pay for an annuity, a further annual income, or invested until a person needs that money to pay for long-term care, when an "impaired life" annuity can be bought.

A man in good health aged 80 with a £100,000 lump sum can secure an income of £13,000 net of basic tax. An impaired life annuity, perhaps because he has suffered a stroke, will pay £21,000 a year, Mr Aaron points out.

The final option is insurance, protecting oneself against the possibility of needing care. The odds here are at present five to one against needing care.

There are several companies offering this type of cover, including Commercial Union, FPP Lifetime, Hambro Assured, Prime Health, Scottish Amicable and BUPA. Choosing between them is a job for an independent adviser.

The most important thing, as our table shows, is to begin to plan early. The younger you are the less it costs — even if you are accused of being a killjoy for pointing it out.

For a free 'Guide to Long-term Care', call the Aaron Partnership, 01908 281544.

The costs of insuring for long-term care

Age	Female	Male
65	£38-£42	£38-£42
70	£48-£50	£48-£50
75	£52-£54	£52-£54
80	£58-£60	£58-£60
85	£62-£64	£62-£64
90	£68-£70	£68-£70

Example of monthly premiums for £100 monthly benefit

Wide variations on the cost of premiums depend on any additional benefits included in each policy. Compare policies and benefits. If possible talk to an independent adviser.

Source: Aviva Paragon

PERSONAL PENSIONS

Do you need a personal pension that lets you vary contributions without paying a penalty?

You may be quite happy with your pension. Until you try to change it.

Penalties for early retirement, penalties for varying contributions, even penalties for dying. You begin to wonder just whose pension it is.

You see, in order to pay commission to brokers and middlemen, some companies impose severe penalties on their personal pension plans, should you wish to make changes.

Happily, The Equitable Life has never paid commission to third parties for the introduction of new business. You don't have to commit yourself to paying identical contributions every year. And, should you decide to retire early, your benefits would be exactly the same as if you had chosen that date initially.

What is more, you have the reassurance of knowing that your pension fund is in the hands of one of the finest investment teams in the UK.

If you'd like to know more, call (0990) 38 46 58 or send off the coupon below for further information by post and by telephone.

www.equitabl.co.uk

Information/advice will only be given on Equitable group products

Regulated by the Personal Investment Authority

THE EQUITABLE LIFE, FREEPOST, WALTON STREET, AYLSBURY, BUCKINGHAMSHIRE HP21 7SR

To: The Equitable Life, FREEPOST, Walton Street, Aylesbury, Bucks HP21 7SR

I would welcome details on The Equitable's pension plans. I am self-employed ☐ I am an employee ☐ I am an employee in a company pension scheme ☐

NAME (Mr/Ms/Ms) _____

ADDRESS _____

Tel (Office) _____

Tel (Home) _____

Date of Birth _____

Postcode _____

By completing and returning this coupon you are authorising us to contact you by post, telephone or email. We will not pass your details to any other company without your permission. Please tick the box ☐

The Equitable Life

You profit from our principles

AVOID HIGH INTEREST RATES

with our Capped Rate Mortgage
GUARANTEED NOT TO RISE ABOVE
7.90% before 1/2/2002

Current rate 7.25% 7.5% APR (variable)
(Maximum 95% LTV)

With the prospect of rising interest rates on the horizon, we can offer you real peace of mind with our Capped Rate Mortgage which runs until 1st February 2002.

During the term of your Capped Rate Mortgage we GUARANTEE that the interest rate you pay will never go higher than 7.90%, no matter how high the Society's standard variable mortgage rate goes.

In simple terms, a Capped Rate Mortgage puts a ceiling on the interest rate applying to your mortgage.

If the Society's standard variable mortgage rate falls below 7.90% during the term of the Capped Rate, the rate you pay on your mortgage will fall as well.

But that's not all you can count on from the Coventry. We also offer a complete Choices range of mortgage deals — everything from fixed rates to discounted rates.

So if you're a first time buyer, moving house or just looking for a better long term mortgage deal, talk to us now for all the facts.

To find out more, contact your nearest branch.
Or call us FREE on 0800 126 125.

LINES ARE OPEN: MON - SUN 9am - 9pm. PLEASE QUOTE CODE EBN1902

Head Office: Coventry Building Society, Economic House, 20, Box 9, High Street, Coventry, CV1 5QN
Telephone: Customer Services Coventry (01203) 839333

Advertisement: A sample (only) of the Society's standard variable mortgage rate falls below 7.90% during the term of the Capped Rate, the rate you pay on your mortgage will fall as well. But that's not all you can count on from the Coventry. We also offer a complete Choices range of mortgage deals — everything from fixed rates to discounted rates. So if you're a first time buyer, moving house or just looking for a better long term mortgage deal, talk to us now for all the facts.

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT.

Hard to beat

Select 60.
High flying interest with only 60 days notice.

For a sky high return on your investment, our new Select 60 Account is hard to beat.

You can make penalty free withdrawals by giving us just sixty days notice.

Or you can gain immediate access with only sixty days loss of interest on the amount withdrawn.

All we ask is that you don't make more than three withdrawals in each calendar year.

You can choose to have your interest paid annually or monthly (we'll keep you up to date with a statement every six months).

And you've the convenience of an account operated by first class post.

This is strictly a limited issue, however. So invest now with £10,000 or more.

For details, call us free from 9 to 5 weekdays or 10 to 3 weekends (you can leave a message at other times). 0500 50-5000

UP TO 7.05% GROSS

AMOUNT YOU INVEST	ANNUAL GROSS	MONTHLY GROSS	ANNUAL NET	MONTHLY NET
£100,000+	7.05	5.84	8.80	5.44
£50,000+	6.75	5.40	8.50	5.20
£25,000+	6.70	5.36	8.45	5.16
£10,000+	6.50	5.20	8.25	5.00

NORTHERN ROCK
Northern Rock Building Society.
Principal Office: Northern Rock House, Gosforth, Newcastle upon Tyne NE3 4TL.
www.nrock.co.uk
Member of the Building Societies Association.
Assets exceed £12 billion.

Rates are correct at 20.1.97 but may vary. The circumstances in which the rates may vary are described in our Select Accounts Terms and Conditions and Charges leaflet. It is important to note that whilst investors opening a Select 60 Account will be investing members of the Society, they will not thereby become entitled to vote on and to receive benefits in connection with the Society's proposed conversion to a public limited company based on the London Stock Exchange, unless they satisfy the relevant conditions. Interest will be paid after deduction of income tax at the lower rate (currently 20%) or, subject to the required certification, gross. Where the tax deducted exceeds an investor's tax liability (if any), a claim may be made to the Inland Revenue for repayment of tax. For individuals whose income falls within the lower rate band, the tax deducted will match their liability to tax on the interest and they will have no more tax to pay on it. Individuals who are liable at the higher rate of income tax of 40% will have to pay additional tax on the interest to cover the difference between the tax deducted and the higher rate tax due. Account balances below £10,000 will receive interest at the prevailing bank savings rate. Interest is not paid on balances below £50, unless the account holder is registered as being under 22 years of age. The account is for personal use only and is open to permanent UK residents. Full written terms and conditions will be sent with your application form. Following receipt of your completed application form, your confirmation slip will usually be sent to you within five full working days. Select 60 is a Share Account. Opening an account is subject to status and identification will be required. Minimum investment £10,000. Maximum holding with the Society £500,000.

No need to be confused

The principle is simple – just tax-free investment. Tony Lyons and Ken Welsby explain

If you pay income tax, then personal equity plans are the best choice for long-term savings since they offer the returns from stock market investment free of all tax.

Today, some 60 per cent of the total amount invested in PEPs is looked after by unit trust managers while nearly 10 per cent is accounted for by investment trusts.

Yet many investors are still confused about PEPs, according to research carried out for National Westminster by Research Surveys of Great Britain.

This showed that 22 per cent of the population have considered buying a PEP but four in 10 of those thought that they were "complicated", while one in five thought that "getting information on them is not easy".

As Brian Tora points out elsewhere on this page, a PEP is a package which holds the investment – usually in the form of shares.

Single company PEPs are the easiest to understand as the money has to be invested in the shares of just one company. These are often used by companies which promote share ownership by employees and those which actively encourage private investors.

For example, many of those who were members of Abbey National when it was a building society are now its shareholders, and their ranks were swollen last year by about half a million former National & Provincial members who sold their society to the Abbey in return for shares.

If you were one of the lucky ones, holding those shares in Abbey's own PEP means that you enjoy the income and capital growth free of tax.

In this context, there are a couple of points to note. First, remember that you can invest in a new PEP in every tax year, and secondly, in addition to the £6,000 limit on general PEP investments, you can save a further £3,000 in a single company PEP.

So if you have some spare cash now – say from a Tessa which has matured – you can invest it in a 1996/97 PEP before 5 April. Then, if you do collect windfall shares in the next tax year, you can put those in your 1997/98 PEP and again collect the earnings tax-free. Although you may not collect the full £3,000 on conversion, you will be able to top up your holding if you still want a stake in the business.

Also straightforward is the concept of self-select PEPs. These are the original form of PEP, and are mainly for the sophisticated investor who – usually with the help of a stockbroker – selects a portfolio of shares administered by the chosen manager.

So-called "execution-only" stockbrokers also offer self-select PEPs. But in view of the risks, you must remember not to invest money that you cannot afford to lose.

But of the 1,000 or so different PEP plans available, the great majority are packaged plans which invest in ordinary stocks and shares via unit and investment trusts.

Most funds are straightforward equity investments – buying shares

On the recovery trail: Some funds buy shares in companies that have suffered setbacks in a spread of companies which have either been selected individually on their merits or because their performance is measured by an index the fund is trying to track.

Some groups offer a fund of funds, whereby investment is in a range of trusts in the manager's stable. Some invest in smaller companies.

A number of management groups such as M&G and Fidelity have trusts specialising in recovery situations. These buy shares in companies that were once high flyers and then suffered a difficult time, but where the managers expect them to recover strongly. Others invest in a mixture of UK and overseas shares.

Recent years have seen some new types of PEP introduced, including funds which invest in corporate bonds and those which offer some form of guaranteed performance.

Corporate bond PEPs offer a means of securing a high income. They have been used largely as a means of boosting the earnings of those at or near retirement. There are now nearly 60 such plans available, mainly offered by unit trust managers, which look after some £3.3bn. They usually secure high dividends by investing in debentures, loan stocks and similar assets.

Another growth area has been the use of various guarantees to protect the investment in PEPs. Some offer a straightforward guarantee of a full return of capital after a fixed period irrespective of the state of the stock market. Typical was a recent offer from Barclays which promised the full return of capital after five years or the percentage growth in the FTSE 100, whichever was the higher.

Other managers, including Scottish Widows, offer funds where any gains are locked in but which limit losses by setting a minimum unit price at various periods, usually each quarter or year.

These funds normally levy higher than average charges and offer protection at the price of some falling off in performance. In order to provide the guarantees, they usually have to invest in a mixture of ordinary shares, fixed interest stocks and derivatives such as futures. The latter is a means of paying a fee today to buy or sell a share in the future at a fixed price.

Whatever the type of packaged PEP you choose, the underlying fund should always be examined to make sure it fits with the investor's long-term investment aims. But always remember that, like any other stock market investment, the value of your investment will rise and fall in line with company and stock market performance.

It's that time of the year again

Brian Tora

Hey-ho me hearties! The PEP selling season is upon us! And if that sounds aggressively swashbuckling, just look at the number of advertisements for PEPs, or sift through the reconstituted acres of forest that will have been pouring through your letterbox during the past few weeks.

The exultation is to Buy! Buy! Buy! But should you? My view is that of the typical economist. "On the one hand ... and on the other."

Let us start with a bit of history. PEPs are 10-years old next month. Like many in the stockbroking community, I was slow to come round to their attraction.

But history has shown that PEPs were indeed a good idea. Since their launch, share prices have trebled and it is not unusual to find someone who has burrowed into their savings on a regular basis to top up their PEP pile with portfolios now worth £100,000-plus.

But what exactly is a PEP? It stands for personal equity plan. I hope I do not appear condescending. It is just that we seem to have forgotten that a PEP is not a product. It is simply an envelope into which other forms of savings and investment are put, which makes them invisible to the taxman. This is where PEPs really come into their own.

Did you know that the responsibility for ensuring that all the niceties for the Inland Revenue are observed lies with your plan manager? You do not have to enter a PEP on your tax return. Not its purchase, or its sale, or any of the changes that take place during its life.

PEP has become a word in its own right. I expect to hear it adopted into the Oxford English Dictionary at any moment. The fact that you can now buy corporate bond PEPs is a clear sign that people have forgotten their origins. Corporate bond equities? The very idea!

I come back to the fact that PEPs are viewed as a product – particularly by those trying to sell them. I believe they should be viewed for what they are – personal equity plans. In other words, an incentive to buy ordinary shares direct.

Now, most PEPs that are sold are just unit trusts or other collective investments by another name. Still, it is wise to remember that these collective funds, for all their attractions, are not usually a cheap way of accessing the market.

If there is a high front-end charge, the effect can be to offset the tax advantages for many years to come.

But do not let me put you off. Anyone who has a share portfolio should be steadily transferring it into the PEP pot. And if you are unable to make adequate pension contributions, then a PEP is a good stand-by.

As to which PEP to buy. Well, if you are an investor with a reasonable amount of capital at your disposal, I still favour the direct equity approach.

After all, a husband and wife can put £18,000 in now and another £18,000 immediately after the end of the tax year in April – something we should all consider carefully if a general election is in the offing.

That £36,000 can buy you a reasonable spread of risk. And if chosen carefully, the charges should be most competitive.

Brian Tora is chairman of the investment strategy committee at Greig Middleton.

PEPs

"Do you want a FT-SE Top 100 tracker PEP from a FT-SE Top 100 company?"

67%* tax free growth
This is how much the FTSE 100 Share Index has grown in the five years to December 1996. So a PEP which tracks the index can offer a worthwhile option to medium and long term investors.

The Guardian Direct Top 100 tracker PEP

Lower charges
The annual fund management charge is only 1% of the value of your investment. No opening charge, no exit charge and no commission charges.

Easy to arrange
Start a PEP with just £30 a month and invest up to £6,000 tax free each year. Invest the easy way – we'll send you all the details.

With the UK's top 100 companies
The FTSE 100 Share Index means the largest UK companies quoted on the Stock Exchange – which includes many household names that you will recognise.

Don't lose your tax free allowance
If you've not taken a PEP this tax year act now – after 5 April you'll have lost your 1996/97 tax free allowance. Regular savings application – minimum £30 a month – must be received by 28 February. Lump sum applications – minimum £1,000 – by 3 April.

* Source: Micropal
† Past performance is not necessarily a guide to the future. The value of investments and the income from them can go down as well as up.

Growth of the FTSE 100 Share Index against a typical Building Society Account. £2500 minimum investment. Source: Micropal 13.12.96. Offer to offer prices. Gross Reinvestment, based in UK Sterling, calculation: lump sum (£6000).

The information reflects our understanding of current legislation and tax regulations which are both subject to change.

The Guardian Direct Top 100 tracker PEP is a unit trust investment so the value of the units and income from them can go down as well as up. On the encashment of the units you may receive back less than you invested. In the event of the income from the trust being insufficient to meet the annual fund manager's fee and other allowable expenses, then the manager reserves the right to be remunerated from the capital value of the trust. Tax legislation may change in the future. The value of any tax relief depends upon the financial circumstances of the investor.

Guardian Direct Services Ltd is a Representative only of the Guardian Financial Services marketing group which is regulated by the Financial Services Authority for the insurance, pensions and unit trust business. Guardian Direct Services Ltd is regulated by the Financial Services Authority for the insurance and unit trust business. Guardian Direct Services Ltd is not a member of the Financial Services Compensation Scheme (FSCS). Calls may be recorded.

Guardian Direct

0500 28 28 20

to-whit to-whit to-who

The six year ends 5 April – act now to claim your tax free PEP allowance

we are open Mon-Fri 8am-9pm Sat-Sun 10am-4pm

For complete your details below and return to:

Guardian Direct, FREEPOST 168 303281 Walsford WD17 8YD.

Title	Initials	Surname
Address
Postcode
Home Tel No	STD code

* Tax year in which you wish to invest 19... for 96

† The information you provide Guardian Direct Services Limited may be used by Guardian Direct Services Limited and may be passed on to other companies or individuals who may be interested in your information. If you prefer not to receive this information, please tick the box.

113%* GROWTH TAX-FREE. FROM THE WOOLWICH.

If you had been one of the many foresighted investors who put money into the Woolwich UK Stockmarket Fund PEP at launch in January 1991, you would now be looking at a return of 113%*.

In other words, you would have more than doubled your money. What is more, every penny of profit would be totally tax-free.

You can invest as little as £25 a month or a lump sum of anything from £500 up to £6,000. And you have the reassurance that your money is invested mainly in solid blue-chip British companies like Shell, Glaxo Wellcome and BT.

The friendly advisers at any Woolwich branch will be happy to give you further details. Alternatively, send off the coupon today or call us free for an information pack on 0800 22 22 00 quoting reference ISF15/2. For your security, telephone conversations may be recorded.

* Source: Micropal Ltd, based prior to selling price, April 1991-27.1.97, the UK Stockmarket Fund grew by 113.1% with income reinvested.

To: Woolwich Building Society, Customer Response Unit, Freeport 107 99B, Kingswood House, Midland, Kent DA14 4BB.
112 for more details of the Woolwich UK Stockmarket Fund.

Name _____ Address _____

Postcode _____

Telephone _____ ISF15/2

Get much more with the
WOOLWICH

Internet address: <http://www.woolwich.co.uk/woolwich>

THE VALUE OF YOUR INVESTMENT AND INCOME EARNED IS NOT GUARANTEED AND CAN GO DOWN AS WELL AS UP. PAST PERFORMANCE IS NOT NECESSARILY A GUIDE TO FUTURE PERFORMANCE.

All references to income are to UK taxation and are based on the Society's understanding of UK law and Inland Revenue practice as at 5th April 1996. Tax reliefs referred to may change and their value will depend on your own financial circumstances. Woolwich Building Society represents only the Woolwich Marketing Group which is regulated by the Financial Services Authority for the insurance and unit trust business. Any advice or recommendation provided will only relate to products offered by the Woolwich Marketing Group. Principal Office of Woolwich Building Society and Registered Office of Woolwich Unit Trust Managers Limited: Corporate Headquarters, Watling Street, Rushway, Kent DA6 7PL.

Take yo
Incor
Abige

Hard Labor

Montrose well

HOW WILL TRACK DO YOUR
THIS YEAR

THE NEW

CALL NOW FOR YOUR
1997 PEP GUIDE
0800 526 092
FREEPHONE LINES
OPEN 24 HOURS

CHASE DE VERE

551 من الامثل

PEP survey

Take your pick from 1,200

Income or growth? High risks or security?
Abigail Montrose advises on choosing a plan

It's easy to give yourself a headache when it comes to finding the right PEP, since there are more than 1,200 from which to choose - a figure that does not include self-select schemes in which you make your own investment decisions.

Whether you are a first-time buyer or a seasoned investor, you should think carefully before deciding which scheme to invest in this tax year.

The first thing to consider is what you want from your PEP - are you looking for income or capital growth?

If you want an income, you should check what the manager hopes to achieve, how often you will be paid and if you can vary the level of income you take.

If you are looking for a high income, such as 8 per cent a year, you cannot expect your PEP to achieve much capital growth. High income seekers tend to be steered towards corporate bond PEPs, although many general PEPs also invest primarily for income.

Those in search of capital growth should look for a PEP with this as their main objective. Next, you should consider how much risk you are prepared to take. The greater the risk the higher the potential rewards. As the table shows, however, the average growth from many PEPs is far higher than returns on sums left in a building society.

There are some PEPs which give the option of taking variable amounts of income or leaving the capital to grow. The GA PEP offers a choice of two unit trusts - income and growth - which allow income to be taken. But the income may also be reinvested.

Some investment sectors are more risky than others. Funds investing in new small companies have a higher risk profile than funds which invest in a wide range of large well-established companies. Similarly, a single company PEP - where you are relying on the performance of just one company - can be more hazardous than investing in a general PEP.

Next you need to decide if you want to manage the investments in your PEP or if you want to buy them ready-packaged in a fund. Some managers offer self-select PEPs.

Once you have narrowed the choice down you should start to look at the individual performance of PEP funds, as it does give some indication of how successful a fund manager has been in the past.

You also should consider the quality of the PEP manager. Does the investment house have a good track record across its whole range of funds? Sometimes it will be down to a single "star" manager - if that one individual were to leave how would the fund fare?

The volatility of funds also is important. Some funds grow steadily, others can rise and fall dramatically in value. So if you are not of a strong constitution this type of fund may not be for you.

Microcap, the fund analyst, gives funds a volatility rating based on past performance. If you are considering a volatile fund, be sure to invest only money which you will not need at short notice because you do not want to have to cash in your investment while the fund is on a downward spiral.

Charges vary between schemes. Self-select PEPs and others where the underlying fund invests in all or most of the shares of a particular index - known as trackers - have low charges. Where the fund is actively managed, costs are likely to be higher.

While it may be tempting to opt for a PEP with low charges, you should never use this as the sole factor for choosing a PEP. As the tax year draws to a close, many PEP managers offer discounts on their PEP charges to try to attract last minute business.

Many of the big fund managers attract your business directly from advertisements like those on these pages. But there are other ways to invest in a tax-free plan, including the PEP "boutiques" or discount shops which offer a range of plans, including those from well-known investment houses.

These discount brokers work on commission and win business by splitting this commission with their customers in the form of a discount on the fund manager's charges.

Discount brokers receive commission for every PEP they sell. So even if you come across a plan with no initial charges, such as M&G and Fidelity's no-fee PEPs, you may still be able to get these cheaper by going through a discount broker.

Hard Labour softens

Abigail Montrose weighs up change at the top

PEPs have been one of the success stories of the decade, but how safe would these tax-free investments be under a Labour government?

In recent months there has been speculation that if the Labour Party were to win the general election it would shake up the PEP regulations. It has been suggested that a Labour government might limit the tax relief on PEPs to the basic rate of tax, and that it is considering setting a maximum level to the overall amount that can be sheltered from tax through a PEP.

In recent weeks the party has moved to allay these fears. Mike O'Brien, Labour's shadow economic secretary, has dismissed the rumours as "rubbish", while in a recent interview Alistair Darling, shadow chief secretary to the Treasury, said that the Labour Party had always supported the PEP regime and had no plans to change it.

Both the Association of Unit Trust and Investment Funds, and the Association of Investment Trusts have said that they see no reason to think the Labour Party will change the PEP rules. Many in the investment world support this view. Tony Wood, marketing director at Virgin Direct, believes Labour is committed to keeping personal equity plans.

"It makes perfect sense. The hordes of people who have invested in PEPs over the last 10 years are exactly the same audience that Labour is appealing to," he says.

Paul Ashby, marketing manager at Barclays Bank, thinks Labour is as committed to PEPs.

"I don't think the Labour Party has a problem with the principle of PEPs. But they might decide there's a better way to offer tax incentives as a way to save and invest," he says.

In fact, a recent speech by Gordon Brown, the shadow chancellor, hinted at the possibility of a new scheme being launched, offering tax relief to long-term investors.

Many investors are still concerned about the implications of a possible Labour victory in the polls as a survey by Gavin Anderson & Co, a firm of communications consultants, illustrates.

Of the 600 unit trust investors surveyed, 37 per cent said they thought a Labour election victory might harm investment prospects in the sector.

On the other hand, a survey of floating voters published this week by the FT and the advertising agency FCB suggests that Labour is no longer seen as a party that would tax the public more significantly than the Tories.

While some investors are obviously nervous at the prospect of a Labour government, the investment industry is ambivalent.

As Ian Overage, marketing manager at Flemings, points out: "Historically, markets have not underperformed under a Labour government - compared with a Conservative government over the full five-year period".

In fact, the biggest fall on the stock market was between 1972 and 1973 when the market fell in value by around 75 per cent under a Conservative government, he notes.

HOW WILL YOU TRACK DOWN YOUR PEP THIS YEAR?

For years PEPGUIDE has helped thousands and thousands of investors in their annual hunt for the right PEP. It cuts through all the conflicting claims of PEP providers and tells you exactly what you need to know to get on the track of your PEP amongst the 1,200 and more on offer.

The 1997 PEPGUIDE analyses in depth the key features of every PEP on the market and keeps you completely up to date on all the top performers. It costs only £12.95 including separate PEP Performance Charts - published in January and July. What's more the full cost will be refunded to you if you later take out a PEP through Chase de Vere.

CALL NOW FOR YOUR 1997 PEPGUIDE
0800 526 092
FREEPHONE LINES
OPEN 24 HOURS

CHASE DE VERE
INVESTMENTS PLC

Please return this coupon to: Chase de Vere Investments PLC, FREEPOST, Bristol, BS38 7JH.

Please send me ☐ copies of the 1997 PEPGUIDE @ £12.95 each. ☐ I enclose £. Cheques to be made payable to "PEPGUIDE" or ☐ VISA/ACCESS

Expiry Date  Signature

Name

Address

Post Code  Tel No  DOB

JUPITER

THE PEP THAT SHINES AMONG THE STARS

Income unit trusts - £1,000 invested over 5 years

Source: Microcap - Offer to bid, net income reinvested to 1.2.97.
*UK Equity Income Sector. **UK Equity & Bond Sector

Choosing a PEP for 1996/97? The thing you need above all is consistent long-term performance.

This is where the Jupiter Income Trust shines.

Over the five years to 1st February 1997, an investment in the Trust has more than trebled in value, as the chart shows.

With such a strong record the Jupiter Income Trust is a PEP fund which you simply cannot afford to overlook.

To find out more about our star PEP or range of unit trusts, talk to your financial adviser, call us free now, or return the coupon.

JUPITER

Leaders in long-term performance

FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL FREE ON 0500 0500 97

To: Investor Support, Jupiter Unit Trust Managers Ltd, Knightsbridge House, 197 Knightsbridge, London SW7 1RB.

Please send me further information on: The Jupiter PEP ☐ Jupiter Unit Trusts ☐

Print Name (Mr/Ms/M)

Address

Post Code

JND152

Jupiter Unit Trust Managers Ltd is regulated by IMRO and the Personal Investment Authority, Member of AUTIA A subsidiary of Commerzbank AG, one of Germany's leading banks. You should remember that the value of an investment and the income from it can go down as well as up, it may be affected by exchange rate variations, and you may not get back the amount invested. Current tax levels and reliefs may change and their value will depend on your individual circumstances. Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance. Up to 100% of the annual management fee is to be taken from capital of Income Trust and High Income Fund. This may accordingly restrict capital growth. Copies of the half-yearly and annual reports may be obtained from Jupiter Unit Trust Managers Ltd, Knightsbridge House, 197 Knightsbridge, London SW7 1RB. Scheme particulars may also be obtained from that address.

Keeping up with the Footsie

While PEPs may have been born a decade ago, they did not really come of age until 1992 when collective funds such as unit trusts first became eligible for the full general PEP allowance.

Since then an increasing number of fund management groups have promoted the idea of funds which track the various stock market indices.

Over 10 per cent of the near £30bn invested in all PEPs has gone into tracker funds and new ones are being launched all the time, the latest coming from National Westminster.

An investment cliché is the "75 per cent rule", which states that in any given year, 75 per cent of all fund managers underperform the FTSE 100 index – the 100 largest UK companies in terms of market capitalisation.

Therefore, why not simply invest in all the companies that make up the FTSE 100? The most common trackers follow either the FTSE 100 or the more widely based FTSE All-share index.

The GA Blue Chip Tracking Trust, launched last month by General Accident, one of the UK's top life companies, is among those tracking the FTSE 100.

Some of the 30 funds available, however, aim to match non-UK indices. One such example comes from Norwich Union, which aims to track the performance of a global index. Others can track a European index, Wall Street's Dow Jones or Japan's Nikkei.

Over the year to the beginning of February 1997, the FTSE 100 rose 18.9 per cent gross, while the All-share rose 17.2 per cent. Surprisingly, only four of the 23 tracker funds in existence for the whole of this period came within 1 percentage point of this. This is partially explained by the charges levied by the managers.

In a fiercely competitive market, the cost of investing in an index-tracking fund is very low. Most charge nothing for initial investment and between 0.5 and 1 per cent for the annual management charge. The GA PEP, for example, levies no initial or exit charges and a 1 per cent annual fee.

Over the year, the best performing tracker fund was the largest: Virgin's UK Index Tracking – which looks after some £400m in PEP funds – rose 16.85 per cent. This was closely followed by Fidelity's MoneyBuilder Index, which went up 16.8 per cent.

Another reason funds fail to match the stock markets is that they invest in either a partial selection of the companies in the index or in the more volatile futures market of those shares.

Why then invest in actively managed PEP funds? Typically, they charge around 3 to 5 per cent for the initial purchase of units and around 1 per cent for the annual charge.

If longer-term performance is looked at, good actively managed funds easily outperform the index. Over the last five years, the FTSE 100 has doubled in value. More than 50 UK growth and income, or just growth funds, have beaten this and Fidelity's Recovery fund, the top performer, has almost trebled in value.

Active fund management comes into its own when markets are volatile or falling.

A good tracker fund is a reasonable first PEP investment for the novice investor. Long term, it will show reasonable performance when measured against the average fund. But to outperform the stock market a good actively managed fund can give a better result.

Tony Lyons

The Independent has published a 32-page guide to PEPs, sponsored by General Accident Life. Written by Steve Lodge, it explains the difference between tracker funds and actively managed PEPs. For your free copy, call 0500 125888 or fill in the coupon on page 30.

Global options: Funds that track the performance of Japan's Nikkei index are available

PHOTOGRAPH: AFP

PEP
Initial offer

5%* OR 6.3%*

You can enjoy the benefits of investing in stocks and shares to achieve an above average and increasing income over the long term.

The new M&G High Income Investment Trust P.L.C. is available now for investment through The M&G PEP tax free.

You can choose from:-

- 5%* for Package units.
- 6.3%* for Income and Growth units for those willing to take a higher risk.

Complete the coupon or phone 0990 600 617

OFFER closes 3.00pm 7th March 1997

To: The M&G Group, Bristol BS38 7ET. Please send me details of the new M&G High Income Investment Trust PEP.

NO SALESMAN WILL CALL.

You should contact your independent financial adviser (if you have one) before investing. The price of investments and the income from them can go down as well as up. The value to you of the tax benefits will depend on your own circumstances. The tax regime of PEPs could change in the future.

Mr/Mrs/ Miss/Ms	INITIALS	SURNAME
ADDRESS
POSTCODE		KE-CEAG

M&G does not offer investment advice or offer any recommendations regarding investments. We only market the packaged products and services of the M&G marketing group.

Issued by M&G Financial Services Limited. (Regulated by The Personal Investment Authority.) M&G Unit Trusts are managed by M&G Securities Limited. (Regulated by IMRO and The Personal Investment Authority.) Tom Carroll is an employee of M&G Limited, an associate of M&G Financial Services Ltd.

We never make your name and address available to unconnected organisations. We will occasionally tell you about other products or services offered by ourselves and associated M&G Companies. Tick the box ☐ if you would prefer not to receive this information.

M&G

Managing your money for the longer term

“We believe the trend in income stocks is on the up. This launch has come at an ideal time to take advantage of this opportunity”

Tom Carroll
M&G Fund Manager

*Estimated Gross Dividend Yields are based on investment within the M&G PEP and based on the manager's projected portfolio as at 31.12.96 and are subject to change. After the initial offer period there will be a spread between the buying and

No initial charge. No withdrawal fee.

Charging into hidden costs

From the trenches, Simon Read assesses the price war

As we approach the end of the tax year, the PEP providers go into overdrive offering better deals to attract new investors.

Today Perpetual, one of the leading fund managers, is launching a World Income Fund PEP with a discount of 2 per cent, reducing the initial charge to 3.25 per cent. But these kinds of offers are short term – Perpetual's discount lasts until just 28 February – and are designed to attract clients in the busiest PEP season of the year.

Behind the launch offers and end of tax-year deals, however, there has been a real price war going on.

Now it's possible to pick up a PEP and pay no initial charges with the likes of Virgin Direct and Legal & General. PEPs from these companies have even reduced annual management charges to around 0.5 per cent. So why does the most popular PEP manager, Perpetual, want to keep its front-end charge of 5.25 per cent and annual management fees of 1.5 per cent?

Because its performance has been so good in the past,

Perpetual feels that there are plenty of investors who are happy to buy into those potentially higher returns.

A specialist fund can present greater risks and the novice or conservative investor may be happy with the average returns an index-tracker fund promises. Then it's simply a question of choosing on price – but you do need to check if there are any exit charges.

Some PEP managers, such as M&G, have done away with initial charges only to introduce sliding scales of fees if you close the PEP within five years.

Alternatively, you could contact a discount shop which offers a range of PEPs, including plans from well-known investment houses.

Many brokers offer cashback or promise to undercut their rivals. The PEP Shop in Nottingham promises to beat any other broker's deal on a particular PEP, while Wolverhampton-based PEP Direct, promises to be 5 per cent cheaper than any other broker. PEP Direct charges a flat 2.5 per cent for any PEP purchase, and offers full cashback discounts.

1. Jupiter
2. Schroder
3. Perpetual
4. Johnson Fry
5. Fidelity
6. Abtrust
7. Credit Suisse
8. Commercial Union
9. GT
10. Invesco

THE PEP PICKER'S TOP TEN

Top performing PEPs have a habit of attracting large commission charges. Ask any of the top ten PEP companies and you could pay as much as £360 on an investment of £5000. But not if you call us.

We charge just one flat fee of £25, and return any buying commission to you, the investor. Why not save yourself some money? For a free brochure, freephone 8 till 8, any day of the week.

0800 413186

PEPDIRECT™

The UK's LARGEST Flat-Fee PEP Provider***

PEPDIRECT is the registered PEP dealing arm of Torquil Clark Associates Ltd, who are independent Financial Advisers regulated by the Personal Investment Authority. Fee returned if no commission saved. The value of investments and the income from them can fall as well as rise. *First Quarter 1996.

The PEPDIRECT Team, Torquil Clark Associates Ltd, FREEPOST WY316, King's House, St. John's Square, Wolverhampton WV2 1BR

A more constant return

Simon Read looks at corporate bonds

Eighteen months ago, tax rules were changed to allow the introduction of corporate bond PEPs, a new investment opportunity under the tax-free umbrella. These plans represent a much lower risk than a general equity-based PEP as they invest in fixed-interest bonds and other securities.

The key point about such investments is that their returns are constant - unlike equities, where returns depend on stock market performance. For that reason they are often aimed at people who have shed away from PEPs, preferring the relative safety of a building society or bank.

Corporate bond PEPs can be ideal for those looking for high income with no need for capital growth, but it would be a mistake to underestimate the risks attached to this type of investment.

In effect they are fixed-interest bonds issued by companies to raise money. The companies pay interest on their bonds and repay the capital at a pre-set date. Investors are therefore lending a company money for a fixed time and receiving interest on the loan until it is paid back. Convertibles, which are also allowed in a corporate bond PEP, are similar vehicles in that they offer a fixed rate of interest, but they also offer investors the chance to convert their option into shares.

For that reason they offer lower returns than corporate bonds, but do offer the extra potential of enjoying the capital growth associated with equities.

Corporate bonds and convertibles are generally bought by fund managers so private investors can join the game through these managers' unit trusts. It's a game worth playing as yields, the return you get from your investment, can be 7-8 per cent with corporate bonds, compared with 3-4 per cent with equities.

There are often two yields quoted on corporate bond PEPs: the running yield and the gross redemption yield. The first relates to the current estimated level of income you can expect from the fund, but this can be misleading because it takes no account of any capital gains or losses. The second figure gives a better indication of the return on your investment as it takes into account gains or losses on capital, as well as income.

Comparing the redemption yield with the running yield may, in fact, reveal that the gross return of the fund may fall over time, particularly if the running yield is much higher.

How should you choose a corporate bond PEP? Obviously the yield is something to consider but charges should also be taken into account. This is because charges have a much greater effect on corporate bond PEPs than general PEPs as your capital is unlikely to be growing.

There is a handful of companies that make no initial charge on one or more of their corporate bond PEPs. They include Fidelity, Guinness, Hight, Jarvis, M&G, Save & Prosper, Sun Alliance and Virgin Direct. However, not all of these PEPs are particularly highly rated by the experts.

The Allenbridge Group, a firm of specialist performance analysts, rates corporate bond PEPs according to the level of income offered, allied to fluctuations in the market value and in conjunction with the underlying yield. Its three top-rated funds are the Barclays Unicorn Income Manager, Commercial Union PFT Monthly Income Plus and HTR Preference and Bond.

The Independent is offering a 'Free Guide to PEPs', written by Steve Lodge, personal finance editor at The Independent on Sunday. The 32-page guide, sponsored by G4 Life, is available by calling 0500 125888, or filling in the coupon on page 30.

How to play by the Inland Revenue's rules

Because personal equity plans are tax shelters, their ownership and operation are subject to specific Inland Revenue rules.

You must be over 18 and live in the UK. Married couples can each have a PEP - but cannot transfer unused allowances to the other partner. You cannot open a PEP on behalf of children or grandchildren.

You can open new PEPs in each tax year - but if you do not invest up to the limit in one year you cannot roll over the unused allowance.

These limits apply only to "qualifying investments" which are strictly defined.

Authorised unit trusts and investment trusts must hold at least 50 per cent of their funds in such investments.

Shares in companies registered in the UK or any other EU member state and which are quoted on a "recognised European exchange" are also covered. This covers the main London market and continental bourses, but not the Alternative Investment Market.

Single company PEPs - which have a separate £3,000 limit - can invest only in the ordinary shares of a single EU company (excluding investment trusts).

If your PEP invests in non-qualifying assets - those not listed above - the investment limit for each tax year is £1,500 rather than £6,000.

Corporate bond PEPs can invest in debentures, preference shares and convertibles.

They must hold at least 51 per cent of their funds in such qualifying assets; the balance can be held in "non-qualifying" assets - which generally mean cash, bank deposits and gilts.

Did your free PEP beat all these indices last year?

Over the last year, the Govett Strategic Investment Trust PEP has given better returns than the FTSE All-Share Index, the FTSE 250 Index, the FTSE SmallCap Index and the FTSE 100 Index.

And, as there are no PEP management charges, this means that £6000 invested in the Strategic PEP one year ago would now be worth £7190. What other free PEP has done that?

Govett Strategic Investment Trust PLC is the largest and oldest investment trust specialising in high quality small and medium-sized UK companies. We are accepting applications now for new PEPs, PEP transfers, direct investments, and even share exchanges - from as little as £250 or £25 by monthly savings.

If you would like to know more about opportunities to share in Govett Strategic's performance please call us FREE on 0500 796616 or return the coupon. But remember, in order to benefit from this 1996/97 tax year, applications must be completed by 27th March.

To: The Customer Services Department, John Govett & Co. Limited, Shackleton House, 4, Bantle Bridge Lane, London, SE1 2HR. Tel: 0500 796616. Please send me details of the Govett Strategic Investment Trust PEP.

Name _____
Address _____
Postcode _____
Daytime Tel. No. _____

Information you provide may be used to inform you of other products and services available from John Govett. If you do not wish to receive such information please tick here: ☐ All figures quoted are share prices mid-to-end with income reinvested for the year to 26th November 1996. Source: John Govett, Dunsen & Micallef. Past performance since 1.1.92 (observed) approved a change in the Trust's investment strategy on 10.12.91 to 105.47%. Past performance is not a guide to future performance. The price of shares and the income from them can fall as well as rise and investors may not get the amount originally invested. You are reminded that the purchase of shares is subject to 0.5% government stamp duty and this will have an impact on the realisable value of your investment, particularly in the short term. At any one time, the share price of an investment trust may represent a discount or premium to the Trust's net asset value. Your investment should be regarded as long term. The tax benefits associated with PEPs will depend upon your personal circumstances and may vary with changes in legislation. Licensed by John Govett & Co. Limited, Registered by INRO. A member of the ASB Marketing Group.

GOVETT
STRATEGIC INVESTMENT TRUST PLC

NEWTON

The Newton Income PEP. Quite simply the No.1 unit trust PEP since PEPs began.

1997 marks the tenth anniversary of PEPs. And the top performing UK PEPable unit trust over those ten years by a wide margin is the Newton Income PEP. Delivering an unbroken record of income and capital growth, over the period it has:

- Produced an average return of 19.35% per year, beating its nearest competitor by more than 4% per year
- Beaten the FTSE All Share Index by an average of over 5% per year even after all charges
- In fact, if you had invested £1,000 in the Newton Income PEP in January 1987, the value would now be £5,865 - a total return of 486%. Investors in a UK higher rate savings account would only have achieved £1728.

"The Newton Income Fund's unique long-term track record is derived from investing in thoroughly researched stocks. Long-term investors have been rewarded with this remarkable performance, which proves that in PEP investment as in most things, the best value is seldom provided by the cheapest offerings."

For more information return the coupon below, talk to your financial adviser or call us free on 0800 614 330

To: Newton Fund Managers Ltd, FREEPOST, 2 Festival Square, Edinburgh EH3 0EE.

Title _____ First name _____
Address _____
Postcode _____ Daytime Tel. _____

"Newton has a single aim in life: to increase the real wealth of all of our clients."

If someone had told you that a tracker PEP would have grown by 16.5%* tax free†, in only 11 months, would you have invested in one?

If the answer is yes then you could still share in the fortunes of 100 of the UK's largest companies with a Direct Line Tracker PEP.

- Make lump sum and/or monthly investments.
- No initial charges. No bid/offer spread.
- Only 1% annual fee. Exit fee of only 0.2% (to cover stamp duty).
- Top up your investment to your annual £6,000 limit at any time in the tax year.
- To find out more call us now.

0181 253 7737 LONDON 0161 832 7737 MANCHESTER 0141 889 7737 GLASGOW

CALL ANYTIME 8am to 8pm Monday to Friday and 9am to 5pm Saturday. Please quote ref. 3INK http://www.directline.co.uk

DIRECT LINE
PERSONAL EQUITY PLANS

THE INDEPENDENT  Life General Accident

Free guide to PEPs

A 32 page guide telling you everything you need to know about Personal Equity Plans

Mr/Mrs/Ms.....Address.....

Postcode.....

Tel..... ☐ Please tick this box if you don't wish to receive any future financial services information

Please phone 0500 125 888 or complete the coupon and return (no stamp required) to:

Independent GA Life guide
FREEPOST Y0550, York Y01 1BR

GREAT VALUE PENSIONS

www.equitable.co.uk

Regulated by
The Personal Investment Authority

WORLD COVER

ANNUAL TRAVEL INSURANCE

CALL US ON 0800 565 124

YES, YES, YES $$$$.

Yes, we've award-winning performance. Yes, we've the best value PEP range on the market. Yes, we've a wide choice for all your investment needs. Add free switching* and flexibility, and how can you say no? Phone now for details or contact your IFA.

0800 41 41 71

Call free 9am to 6pm, 7 days, http://www.fidelity-investments.co.uk

Fidelity Investments

*Except for the bid-offer spread which is a cost to the investor. Performance is measured against the Fidelity UK Tracker PEP. Past performance is not a guarantee of future results. The value of investments and the income from them can go down as well as up and you may not get back the amount you invested. Tax advantages are subject to change. Fidelity only provides information about its products and does not give any advice or financial advice based on individual circumstances. Fidelity Investments Ltd, the Fidelity PEP manager, regulated by DMO and the Financial Investment Authority.

Perks for Sids: Designed for individual shares like British Airways, PEPs took off after managed funds were allowed

PHOTOGRAPH: GLENN GRIFFITHS

Pick 'n' mix portfolios

Ken Welsby examines self-select schemes

When personal equity plans first appeared, the objective was simple: to give Sid a perk. For those too young to recall the "tell Sid" campaign with which British Gas was privatised, the aim was to offer tax incentives to individuals investing in shares.

The idea was that people would buy shares through stockbrokers and hold them in PEPs, rather than directly, so escaping tax on the earnings.

In this way, reasoned the experts, the public, busy buying into privatisations such as British Airways, would support wider share ownership – and thus, as one commentator put it, "become increasingly engaged by capitalism".

Of course, it hasn't exactly turned out that way. As the rules have changed over the years to allow investors to put the full PEP allowance into managed funds, the original concept of a tax shelter for individual share stakes has been overshadowed by the billions pouring into the packaged investment products.

But for those who want to build their own portfolio, the self-select PEP still has strong attractions. The annual limits – broadly, no more than £6,000 in a general PEP plus a further £3,000 in a single company plan – still apply, and the tax benefits are the same, but the mechanics are slightly different from the packaged product.

You still need a PEP manager – a bank or broker who is authorised to collect and pay your earnings tax-free – and this has to be paid for.

There are not normally any set-up charges, but there are annual charges, and you have to pay dealing charges on each transaction.

Annual charges can range from less than £50 to £250, so it pays to look carefully, and there are also variations in dealing costs. The largest managers of self-select PEPs are Barclays, Lloyds and ShareLink, all of which offer special rates for share stakes being bought into a PEP.

Lloyds Bank's Choice PEP, for example, offers what's probably the cheapest share dealing service in the country at just half of 1 per cent – a third of normal commissions. But there are a couple of snags.

This special rate applies only to 150 of the most popular shares and your orders will be "bulked" with those of other customers, and dealt only on alternate Thursdays. So this service would not really be suitable for volatile shares, or at times of uncertainty in the markets generally.

If you want normal "best price" dealing for your PEP, Lloyds' standard rates are 1.5 per cent, with a minimum of £18.50 and a maximum of £75.

ShareLink charges a similar 1.5 per cent commission, but the minimum and maximum rates are £20 and £37.50 – and you can also use their PEP to subscribe to new issues for an extra charge of £10.

Active investors should take the time to study the company's annual report and accounts – and might consider attending the annual meeting. ShareLink charges £10 for these services and some operators charge more.

You can also use a self-select PEP to shelter existing share stakes – by having your broker sell them and then buy them back into the plan. The process is similar to the "bed and breakfast" share sales and repurchase deals used to crystallise capital gains, and so have become known as "bed and PEP" deals. But you need to think it through: will the costs outweigh the tax saving? Indeed, will the initial sale take you over the limits for capital gains tax?

An alternative way to "tidy up" small share stakes or unit trust holdings is to use a share exchange scheme in which a PEP manager sells your shares and invests the proceeds in a managed fund.

Thought for the day

Over
1200 PEPs.

An IFA can help
you pin one down.

Income? Growth? UK? Overseas? An IFA can run you through the pros - and cons - of the hundreds of PEP offerings on the market, including an independent view of performance. Ask for our 1/2 hour voucher, and ensure that your Personal Equity Plan is both personal - and planned.

0117 971 1177

One phone call. Three approved IFAs near you. Free unbiased advice. Or call in where you see the blue sign.

Yes please I think I'd like to know more about talking to an IFA. Please send me my information pack, the names of three local IFAs and a voucher for my half hour free consultation. I understand that someone will call me as a result of filling in this coupon. The address is IFA Promotion Limited, 17-19 Emery Road, Brinsford, Bristol BS4 5PF.

Name..... Address..... Postcode.....

See an IFA

THIS ADVERTISEMENT APPEARS ON BEHALF OF INDEPENDENT FINANCIAL ADVISERS AND HAS BEEN APPROVED BY A TRUST IN A POSITION BY THE FINANCIAL INVESTMENT AUTHORITY. FINANCIAL INVESTMENT AUTHORITY. FINANCIAL INVESTMENT AUTHORITY. FINANCIAL INVESTMENT AUTHORITY.

New UK Tracker PEP

Call now for tax-free growth

No initial charge, no exit charge*
Low annual charge of only 1%
High growth potential

The NatWest UK Tracker PEP is linked to the performance of the FT-SE100 Index, so as Britain's largest companies do well, so do you. In fact, over the last five years the FT-SE100 Index has grown by over 97%.

The stock market has consistently outperformed typical higher rate building society accounts in the past, so with the NatWest UK Tracker PEP your savings could achieve a much higher level of growth – and it's all tax-free.

You can start your NatWest UK Tracker PEP with just £1,000 or save regularly from £50 each month. You don't need to be a NatWest customer to apply. As long as you want to see higher tax-free growth for your savings, we believe you'll find our NatWest UK Tracker PEP is the obvious choice.

For more information and an Application Form, simply complete the coupon or call today.

* And only approx. 0.5% buying - selling price difference

Call Direct 0800 85 45 81

or write to NatWest Unit Trusts, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.

NatWest
More than just a bank

Unit is invested in a bank or building society account, which is relatively secure, the value of your capital, and the income from it, may fluctuate up and down, and you may not recover the amount of your original investment. Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance. Unit Trusts should be regarded as a medium to long-term investment. We recommend a minimum of 5 years. The levels and dates of, and the frequency of, payments can change. Any tax relief referred to are those currently available, and their availability and value will depend on your individual circumstances. The FT-SE growth rate is based on 31 December 1991 - 31 December 1996 with income reinvested (Source: Hargreaves).

NatWest UK Tracker PEP and other Bank Limited are members of the NatWest Life and NatWest Unit Trust Marketing Group, and can advise on the life insurance, pensions and unit trust products only of that Marketing Group. NatWest Westminster Bank Plc and other Bank Limited are regulated by the Financial Services Authority and FSA. The Plan Manager of the NatWest Unit Trust PEP is National Westminster Unit Trust Managers Limited, which is regulated by the Financial Services Authority and FSA. Registered in England No 920027, Registered Office: 11 Leadenhall Street, London EC3A 3BP. Call with NatWest may be monitored/recorded to maintain and improve our service.

صلى الله عليه وسلم

TO FIND OUT WHAT'S ON TV, WHERE TO GO AND WHEN, READ THE EYE TODAY

Serena Mackesy

Younger wives seem to race for the menopause when they saddle themselves with someone who won't dance

The things you'll do for Saturday night. Five hours in a carful of junk food and plastic dress covers. Sixty quid for a single bed with a shiny floral cover. A lukewarm shower in a glass stall etched with dolphins and apertiffs in a bar run by a man whose idea of a decent Bloody Mary is asking if you want the whole bottle of tomato juice. And now I'm in a tent. It's swagged with pink-and-white polyester lining material, filled with those circles of chipboard covered in double cloths which you used to find all over Fulham in the Eighties, carpeted with sisal. Sisal was invented as a trap for women in athletics. My calves ache from standing on tiptoe.

We've stood around drinking champagne and trying not to look too obvious about clinging to the butane heaters. Dinner has been served by grey-haired ladies with pussycat bows and twin spoons. I've been sandwiched between the DJ, because my hosts think I'm good with creatives, and one of the inbred cousins. DJ has sulked and says he only does this part-time and really he's a film-maker. Inbred cousin is a sweetie and sells local estates to townies. Once the winter pudding plates have been cleared, we've all leapt from our places without a backward glance.

And now it's three in the morning. The dance-floor is full of people pretending to be Mick Jagger to "Honky Tonk Woman". People have pretended to be Mick Jagger at every dance I've ever been to, though I'm sure they didn't dance as badly as 21. The men put their right palms in the smalls of their backs and skip, but the movement looks more surgical truss than sex god these days. I've suddenly realised that I'm seriously out of it; trying to drag a smile from the DJ required a lot of red wine, and it's catching up.

I've also, somehow, cut my elbow. I've only realised this when, after five minutes leaning on it, I've moved and found an ace of hearts spreading, d'Urberville-style, over the white tablecloth. Fortunately, my dress is black. I leave my guilt behind beneath a napkin, and totter—cane that!—off to find a friend.

Then I spot the old bloke. He's sitting there, by himself, in a white dinner jacket and brocade cummerbund, the red carnation in his buttonhole echoing the veins in his cheeks. He's half-way through a big fat stogie and glaring at the dance-floor. Aah, I think. He needs cheering up. I take my little glass of mineral water over to meet him.

"Hello," I say. He looks dolefully over his dewlaps.

Crosses one thigh over the other and fingers his cigar. I tell him my name, extending my hand, and he looks away, mumbling his own mandible. We'll call him Clive.

"This is fun," I say, because it's the sort of insanity you have to come out with. He looks over, and down, at me. I know he's only keeping his chin raised so you can't see the folds, but I still feel like I haven't handed in my homework. "If you like this sort of thing," he replies.

"Are you a friend of Philip's or Hetty's?"

The suggestion that he might be on terms with his hosts offends him. "Neither."

"Oh. Whose friend are you, then?"

He shrugs on his cigar. "I," he announces, "am not a friend of anybody's. I came here with my wife."

"Ah. And who is your wife?"

He mentions a name I remember from university. "Blimey," I say. "I didn't see her here. Where is she?"

"He gestures at the dance-floor, with the proprietorial pride of the much-older husband. There, doing that left-hand-in-right-hand-in-parental hockey-cocky, is a woman I had assumed was a good decade my senior. Sensible haircut, sensible shoes, sensible bodice, sensible smile. Less jeunesse dorée than vieillesse bronzée.

"Go on. I didn't recognise her."

"Humph."

"How long have you been married?"

"Three years."

"Congratulations."

Clive merely looks at me again.

"How did you meet?"

"I employed her. She worked for me."

"How sweet. Then you fell in love."

"We got married."

"Well, she looks very, um, well. It's odd what happens to women who marry men 25 years older than them. In the same way that exotic dances develop Raine Spencer hair and grand manners when they marry dukes, younger wives seem to race for the menopause when they saddle themselves with someone who won't dance."

"Your wife," I say, "is a friend of my sister-in-law. Maybe you've met." I say her name. Clive sneers. "Good, god. I can't be expected to remember all their names," he says. I finish my water and search for something else to say other than "Has anybody ever told you you're a pompous idiot?". I drum my fingers on my thigh, search the tent and spot one of my car-fellows sitting below an arrangement of armchairs on a pole. I stand up, offer my hand up for shaking.

"Goodbye. It was interesting meeting you. And so nice to see Melissa looking so well."

"Yes. She was very childish when I met her, but she's growing up."

Car-sharer is having a miserable time. "The place is full of 23-year-olds," he sighs, "and they all think I'm ancient. By the way, did you know you've got a smear of blood on your cheek?"

The truth is out there. Probably

Perhaps it's irrational to worry about a rising tide of superstition—to communicate with Mars, converse with spirits, describe the horoscope, haruspicate or scry: all these are usual pastimes and drugs, and features of the press, and always have been. But there has been a spurge of the stuff just lately: the embarrassing crudity of Fortean TV, the sudden popularity of magazines about "unexplained phenomena", and Talk Radio's inauguration on Thursday of a Paranormal Day—it all combines to make the determinedly rational mind a tad uneasy.

To be fair, there was a nice tone of scepticism about much of Paranormal Day. But is there ever any justification for giving airtime to people like the "dream detective", who claims to predict acts of terrorism and delays in public transport through symbolically charged experiences in the land of Nod? There's also a danger inherent in the whole idea of swallowing the "Paranormal" in one big lump like this—bundling together all these strands of superstition (alien abductions, ghosts, ESP, vampires) means that you never properly examine the contradictions between them. Reports of fascinating times with the ouija board and mysterious objects floating over Luton Airport become mutually supportive: science is the common enemy, and any attack on it is a blow for an irrational worldview.

Robert Hanks

Of course, some people realise the flaws in this approach, and work from a different angle. One caller to Scott Chisholm proposed a sort of Grand Unification Theory of Loopsiness, claiming that all manifestations of the paranormal, from UFOs to messages from the spirit world, were evidence of beings from another dimension, who have set out to mystify and annoy us (presumably they don't have radio phone-ins in that dimension and need other outlets). If we must have madness, a little method makes it more bearable.

But most people don't need a theoretical framework; nothing will persuade them out of their faith in the inadequacy of reason. My favourite was the man who phoned Tommy Boyd up with a story of mysterious footsteps in the night which could, he insisted, only be explained by a ghost. Did he have a tape, Tommy asked. Yes, said the man, but playing it would be pointless since it didn't sound particularly like footsteps.

It's worth comparing Genesis Radio, a pirate station that sometimes interferes with the reggae pirate station that usually interferes with Radio 3 round our way. Genesis's agenda is based on black consciousness—most of the ads are for Saturday schools offering extra tuition in maths, English and "black history" ("Without history, we are lost"). Last week I caught a riveting lecture on Afrocentric history, which maintained that, for example, the Library of Alexandria contained great histories of African civilisations, and that African rulers only sold their subjects as slaves to the white man because slavery in Africa was actually a pretty benevolent institution.

Some of this was a useful and necessary corrective to the excessively Eurocentric history most of us have learnt; but the same amount was patent nonsense; rather more was blind conjecture unsupported by evidence. What's interesting about this and about the nutters on Talk Radio's Paranormal Day is that they reject academic authority, the careful accumulation of evidence and scrupulous reference to sources which are the foundation of science and history are chucked out of the window. Then again, you might argue that rejection of received ideas is the basis of all original thought. Perhaps the nutters, the guessers and the fanatics are the price we have to pay for a thoughtful, intellectually enquiring populace. If that's so, maybe—just maybe—it's worth it.

This is, quite literally, football war

Towards the end of England v Italy (Sky Sports One, Wed), the English player Gary Neville politely invited a Sky cameraman on the touchline to "get out the fucking way". Well, we've all felt that way about Sky, haven't we? Especially the BBC, used to the best seat in the house until this flashy upstart sat in the row in front. It becomes ever clearer that Sky is not going to get out of the way, any more than the Italian defence was going to step aside for Alan Shearer and pals.

Jasper Rees

The Anglo-Italian encounter was a good chance to see how old and new measure up: Sportsnight's slimline highlights vs satellite's five-hour overkillathon. And my goodness me, it's certainly no coincidence that both channels end in a one, because it was very much a case, I fancy, of Sky Sports One 1, BBC1 1. That's one own goal each. Sky introduced the female singer of the Italian national anthem as Alessandro Bernardi, the stripping tenor from Clerkenwell who had in fact been vetoed by the Italian embassy the day before. And the BBC ripped up their own rulebook to let Rudi Gullit wear a top monogrammed with the letters RUUD. Accountants are still trying to work how much money Gullit's new fashion line saved in free advertising. Afterwards, the England camp were keen to play down the calamity of defeat. As John Motson had reminded us at kick-off, there were still 13 matches to come in this group. ("One hopes that's not unlucky for England," he added. Which, ironically, appears to have been the case. Very much so.) The BBC have adopted a similar stance to England's: they may lose individual battles in the field of broadcasting rights, but there's still all to play for in the war. Which is, of course, a gigantic stack of ordure. The BBC have no more chance of winning this war than Italy do whenever they get involved in one.

Ah yes. Jingoism. National-half reminded Motson of "a sandwich: the outside parts were pretty solid, but the filling, well, that was really supplied by Gee Anfranco Zola." This was probably the metaphor of the night, and not something the Sky pundits were going to top. They were content to be simply worried. "I'm worried," said Ray Wilkins, who wasn't wearing a top monogrammed RAY. They have to wear dark suits on Sky, to convince a sceptical public that the channel takes its duties seriously. (Interesting, though, that its panel of experts have all recently made a pig's ear of management. What does this say about Sky?)

A South Bank Show (ITV, Sun) profile of Gilbert and George found England and Italy working in harmony. But where do the artists (or "artists", as Melv Tubbert them) stand on the Tubbit test? Would Gilbert, the Italian one, have supported his country of origin or adopted homeland? And, in accordance with their system of mutual plagiarism, does George copy him? Or does he copy George? Whatever, they would have loved the entertainment at Wembley, because it was pissing down, and England were crap. The artist likes working with both those materials.

Whatever happened to...

John De Lorean

It was the car that had it all. Gull-winged doors that wouldn't open when you put it in the garage; a stainless steel body that left a mass of fingerprints whenever you touched it, and an engine that made it go like a lorry. Fifteen years ago this month, the De Lorean car company collapsed, owing £40m. What happened?

Underfunded. This might sound odd with De Lorean able to syphon £9m off in a ski company in the States. But he kept asking for more money, so he must have needed it.

And the Labour government seemed only too keen to give it. At a cabinet meeting on 26 July 1978 the then Northern Ireland secretary Roy Mason voiced his approval for the project. De Lorean's credentials were much admired. A factory set up by a man who had reached the heights in General Motors, only to be eased out, seemed ideal. Two thousand new jobs in Northern Ireland appeared one way to transform the situation there. Ultimately, for the worse—a report submitted to the government by McKinsey Associates called it "an extraordinarily risky venture". So they gave £47m.

Health, wealth and happiness De Lorean seemed largely unaffected. A chain of health clubs opened in 1986, echoing his own personal state. "I take good care of myself. That is why, in spite of all my stress, I've never had any problems." Pleas of poverty that resulted from receivers moving in in 1992 were curious bearing in mind his possession of a £4.5m penthouse, and so much art that the cleaners complained about the dusting.

James Austerlitz

Weather

General Situation and 5-Day Outlook:

A ridge of high pressure will move east across the country today, but a deep depression is going to follow from the west.

Today, the whole of Scotland and the northern and western isles will get some sunshine while the wind drops quite light. There will, though, be wintry showers in the north and east. Northern Ireland should be dry with sunshine and patches of cloud, but the wind is going to increase from the southeast later. Most of England and Wales will stay dry with sunshine and patchy cloud while the cool northwest breeze disappears. However, wintry showers will affect north facing coasts.

Wet and windy weather is going to move east across the whole of the country on Sunday with some heavy rain and gales. However, brighter weather and showers will follow from the west. Monday is going to provide some sunshine for a time, but more rain and strong winds will spread from the west. Tuesday looks like being a blustery day with a mix of sunshine and showers. Wednesday will also be showery, but with rain in the south.

World Weather Yesterday Midday (GMT): cloudy, fair, fog, ice, heavy rain, mist, rain, snow, sunny, thunder, previous day's figures at local time.

Aberdeen	sh 5 41	Cardiff	r 5 41	Ipswich	f 5 41	Oxford	r 2 36
Anglo	sh 5 41	Carlisle	f 5 41	Isles of Scilly	r 10 50	Plymouth	dr 8 45
Belfast	sh 5 41	Dover	f 5 41	Jersey	r 9 48	Romford	s 5 43
Birmingham	sh 5 41	Dublin	f 5 41	Liverpool	f 6 43	Scarborough	r 7 45
Bristol	sh 5 41	Edinburgh	r 7 45	Lizard	r 9 48	Southampton	r 6 43
Cardiff	sh 5 41	Exeter	r 4 39	London	c 5 41	Southend	f 6 43
Coventry	sh 5 41	Glasgow	r 6 43	Manchester	f 9 41	Stamford	h 3 37
Doncaster	sh 5 41	Guernsey	r 9 48	Newcastle	s 6 43	Tiree	r 7 45
Edinburgh	sh 5 41	Inverness	r 5 41	Nottingham	s 5 41	York	r 7 45

Lighting-up Times

Today	Tomorrow
London 5:16pm to 7:12am	London 5:17pm to 7:10am
Belfast 5:26pm to 7:22am	Belfast 5:27pm to 7:20am
Birmingham 5:21pm to 7:25am	Birmingham 5:22pm to 7:20am
Manchester 5:20pm to 7:25am	Manchester 5:22pm to 7:23am
Newcastle 5:15pm to 7:25am	Newcastle 5:15pm to 7:25am
Glasgow 5:21pm to 7:40am	Glasgow 5:23pm to 7:37am
Belfast 5:21pm to 7:43am	Belfast 5:24pm to 7:41am

Yesterday's Readings

Location	NO <sub>2</sub>	SO <sub>2</sub>
London	Moderate	Good
S. England	Good	Good
Wales	Good	Good
C. England	Good	Good
N. England	Good	Good
Scotland	Good	Good
N. Ireland	Good	Good

Outlook for Today

Location	NO <sub>2</sub>	SO <sub>2</sub>
London	Moderate	Good
S. England	Good	Good
Wales	Good	Good
C. England	Good	Good
N. England	Good	Good
Scotland	Good	Good
N. Ireland	Good	Good

AM HT PM HT

Location	7.10	8.15	8.5
London	4.49	7.8	17.25
Liverpool	0.09	11.2	12.46
Heath (Alt 600)	-	-	12.18
Glasgow	5.47	3.2	18.17
Doncaster	5.44	3.5	18.13

London, A306 Hemmetsworth Bridge. Closed both ways to general traffic for structural works. Expect congestion on both sides of the river.

London M1. Major roadworks at Five Ways Corner, with no access to or from the A1 Great North Way.

Gloucestershire, M5 J17-20. Contrailow in operation across the Avonmouth Bridge with a 50mph speed limit. Regular rush-hour delays.

Staffordshire, A5 near M6 J12. Closed both ways between Gattley Island (A449) and M6 J12 for roadworks. Directions in use via the A5, A460 and M54.

West Midlands, A34 Birmingham. Major roadworks on Stafford Road in Sparkhill. Regularly cause delays. Also no entry into Hightgate Road.

West Yorkshire. Major long-term roadworks continue around the Leeds junction with lane and speed restrictions. Expect delays on the M1, M621 and Dewsbury Road.

City of Edinburgh, M8 J2. Major roadworks with lane closures on the road about at J2 (Newbridge Spur).

The Sky at Night

Looking W to NW about 9.00 p.m. on 15 February

The Moon is waxing this week and will be full by next Saturday. Moonlight always makes it difficult to spot fainter stars, even from places that are normally free from bad light pollution. Only constellations defined by the brightest of stars are at all apparent. One such noticeable star pattern, a neat W-shape in the northern sky, belongs to Cassiopeia. Cassiopeia is circumpolar for observers in the United Kingdom. That means it circles the pole star in just under 24 hours, never setting below the horizon. Best observing, though, is when it is not too low over the horizon. A sweep with binoculars from Cassiopeia to neighbouring Perseus should reveal the famous double star cluster ("h and chi Persei"). In darker skies you might just spot them with the naked eye. These clusters are about 7000 light years apart from each other.

Jacqueline Mitton

Richard Lloyd Parry
London

These are important matters which could do grave damage to Hong Kong," said Mr. Kinnock. "I have expressed our view that these measures are foolish and very unwise."

British officials suggested earlier in the week that the Chinese might be persuaded to step back, and that there was "still something to play for."

"After 30 June, we will not be the sovereign power," said a senior source. "We can't send a gunboat or a task force and our means of leverage are limited, but one of them is international pressure."

Winning image: A poignant image of a man finding the body of his brother, who had been taken hostage by Chechen rebels, was chosen for second prize in the news spot category at this year's World Press Photo awards in Amsterdam. Photographer: Anatoly Maltsev/AP

Richard Lloyd Parry
Singapore

Despite food and fuel shortages, the atmosphere in Pyongyang was calm, diplomats and United Nations officials said. Celebrations for the 55th birthday of the "Dear Leader", Kim Jong Il, will go ahead as planned this weekend but the cancellation of several official trips suggests a battering down of hatches after the defection of Hwang Jang Yop, a senior adviser to Mr Kim.

The Chinese Foreign Minister, Qian Qichen, met his South Korean counterpart, Yoo Chong Ha, in Singapore yesterday to discuss the defection of Mr Hwang, who turned up at Seoul's em-

The drama and the apparent North Korean travel ban have imperilled an initiative to hold peace talks with China, the United States and the Koreans. A preparatory briefing was scheduled for

"and the city is always calm. But we have food shortages, power cuts and only a few hours' water a day. The outlook is not good."

Jan McGirk
New Delhi

Mr Bleach has been in Presidency jail for 14 months, with six others arrested in connection with the case, including the Lat-

11 CHARLES STREET, MAYFAIR, LONDON W1X 8LE
TELEPHONE 0171-409 0376 FACSIMILE 0171-409 0834
24 HOUR BROCHURE ANSWERPHONE 0171-355 1424
ATON 3108

obituaries / gazette

Nora Beloff

Nora Beloff was a pioneer woman journalist of formidable intelligence, courage, and tenacity. She was one of the first British women to become resident foreign correspondents and political writers for national newspapers.

She worked in Paris after the Second World War for Reuters, the Economist and the Observer, and went on to become the political correspondent, and later an international roving reporter, for the Observer, covering the world, Washington as well as Moscow and Belgrade.

She belonged to a generation in which women needed to be brighter and more fearless than male rivals for plum jobs. Her obvious qualifications did not always make her friends amongst her male colleagues, whose arguments she tended to dismiss as "nonsense". And some of her many distinguished political and diplomatic contacts flinched when she came on the telephone to bend their ears. She was incapable of allowing a sloppy thought to slip past without a challenge.

Nora Beloff was the third of the five children her émigré Russian-Jewish parents produced and brought up in Britain. Her father traded in chemicals in what is now part of Belarus; her mother was a graduate of the University of St Petersburg. The couple left Russia for England in 1909 to further the husband's business interests and changed their name from Rabinovich to Beloff. They did not attempt to disguise their origin, but they did want a short name the English could recognise and remember.

They never became fully at home in the English language, but their business enterprises prospered and they founded a brilliant dynasty. Their eldest child, Max, created an independent university and was ennobled. Another became Professor of Psychology at Edinburgh, a daughter became a headmistress, and another married a future Nobel prizewinner for chemistry. The following generation produced, among others, Michael Beloff QC.

Nora was born in 1919, and went to King Alfred's School, a progressive co-educational establishment, before reading History at Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford, where she graduated in 1940. During the war she worked for Political Intelligence at the Foreign Office and joined the British Embassy in Paris after the liberation of France. She left the diplomatic service in 1945 to join Reuters.

She had always asked questions as a child and been chastised for it. As a journalist, she found she was actually being paid to ask questions. Her time with Reuters was not happy; her bureau chief was an enthusiastic Gaullist, which Beloff was not, but she learned the essentials of her trade: how to get news and how to write it in a lively, readable way.

Her typing, however, remained rudimentary. She hammered her machines as if intending to destroy them, but produced coded messages only she could decipher. While a foreign correspondent she wrote the last drafts of her stories on the phone, dictating to skilled, knowledgeable copywriters. She continued to do this while covering politics in London.

She made her name during the Algerian war (1954-62), when she wrote well-informed, hard-hitting features about the torture of the women rebels Djamilia Boupacha and Djamilia Bouhired by French paratroopers. She left France, before de Gaulle returned to power in 1958, travelled the world, and then took on Westminster and British national politics, as the Observer's political correspondent (1964-76). With the support of her editor, David Astor, she exposed the extreme left of the Labour Party in the left-of-centre Observer, which also backed Edward Heath with his battle with the trade unions. Beloff was at heart a Conservative. She did not get on well with Astor's successor, Donald Trefford, and after a final quarrel with him in 1978 left the paper she had served for 30 years.

She did not, however, stop asking questions and continued to bombard her many contacts with letters and telephone calls. Her final years were concentrated on the tragedy of Yugoslavia and what she called "the avoidable war". Typically, she chose an unpopular line of argument and sought to prove that the Serbs were not the villains they had been made out to be. She argued that the international media, especially television, were incapable of getting at the truth. She defended her version of the truth with her customary energy and courage. She abandoned the book she had set out to write on Yugoslavia and concentrated on trying to influence the world's policy-makers.

Nora Beloff devoted most of her life to journalism but, in 1977, when she was 58, she married Clifford Makins, the legendary sports editor of the Observer, who died in 1990. She had no children of her own, but is remembered by her nieces and nephews as "a marvellous aunt" who kept the various branches of the family in touch with each other. Her books reflect her interests, as signments and the awkward questions which never dried up.

'Nonsense' Beloff outside court during her successful libel action against Private Eye, 1972

Photograph: Hulton Getty

William Millinship

Nora Beloff, author and journalist: born 24 January 1919; correspondent in Paris, Washington, Moscow, Brussels, Observer 1948-78; books include The General Says No 1963, The Transit of Britain 1973, Freedom Under Foot 1976, No Travel Like Russian Travel 1979, Tito's Flawed Legacy: Yugoslavia and the West 1939-94 (married 1977) Clifford Makins (died 1990); died 12 February 1997.

Kitty Stein

For more than three quarters of the 20th century, at a time when women were expected to stay at home and raise families, Kitty Stein was one of the lay leaders of Jewish communal life.

In 1923, she was chosen by Henrietta Szold, the charismatic leader of Hadassah, the American women's organisation for the Zionist cause, to become involved in that work and in the building of a Jewish community in Palestine. Later, when she became a central figure for Youth Aliyah, concerned with bringing young children out of Hitler's Germany to Palestine and Great Britain, she met all the leaders of European Jewry involved in the dream for a Jewish homeland. By then, she had married Leonard Stein, the historian of the Balfour Declaration of 1917 and a close associate of Chaim Weizmann, later the first president of the State of Israel.

For her 90th birthday, her son Richard took her to Israel where she could see the fruits of her labours, particularly the youth villages and inspect places like the "Sarah K. Stein club" in Alonim Yizhak, and recall her meetings with the founders of Israel. When the curator of the Weizmann Museum explained that all the rooms were as they had been decades ago, Kitty Stein firmly disagreed and explained how the furniture should be re-arranged.

Recently, an interviewer asked Kitty Stein what she would expect at the end of her life. At once, she quoted Charles Kingsley's "A Farewell":

Be good, sweet maid, and let
Who will be true to thee
Do lovely things, and dream them
All day long,
And so make Life and Death
And that vast For Ever
One grand sweet song.

But she was clever. Her modesty concealed a formidable intellect and profound learning. She explained that Kingsley's quotation by saying: "I believe in that vast forever and shall become part of it. As you cannot add to, or diminish from, the mass of the universe, I am part of that too."

Her questing and questioning approach to faith reflected the thoughts of her favourite teacher, Alfred North Whitehead. After studying at Barnard/Columbia University in New York, she rejected a fellowship at Bryn Mawr so that she could study with Whitehead at Harvard. But she also worked with Harry Wolfson, professor of Hebrew literature and thought and the great expert on Philo and on Spinoza, who considered Kitty one of the best students he had ever encountered.

Kitty was rooted in Judaism (at the age of 16 she was tutored by the great Dayan Moses Hyamson, then a professor of the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York). Born Sara Kitzky, in 1899, she grew up among the granddaughters of American Jewish life. Her surname was the old Russian word for China (Cathay), and her father came from Lithuania.

He was a liberal traditionalist - the horses of the family carriage rested on the Sabbath where they felt the need to live outside New York, where the Orthodox community kept their shops open on the Sabbath. The 1917 furniture stores, early proponents of the hire-purchase plan, were closed on the Sabbath. In time, Kitty joined the Reform movement; but she always respected traditional Jewish life and thought. If not a feminist, Kitty was a fighter for women's rights, and her own public life proved her leadership within Jewry.

Kitty met Leonard Stein at Zionist Congress in Vienna, 1925. The family recalls that she asked her to dance; and he did not like her hair "piled up like that". He pulled out a vital hair, and it all tumbled down. She was furious, and fell in love with him on the spot. When they married three years later, she came back with him to England despite her parents' objection.

Kitty Stein always searched for adventures and encounters. When she first visited Palestine in 1923, travelling from Alexandria to Jerusalem, she found by compartment invaded by Ha-Selassie's entourage and enjoyed a long conversation with the emperor. During the difficult 1930s, she worked with the Woman's Appeal Committee to bring refugee children of Germany, and became part of the executive of the British Youth Aliyah Committee. Her close contacts with the Weizmanns, Rebecs, Steff, Le Nathan and Leonard Moore kept her active in other areas of Jewish life and thought. During the Second World War she lectured to troops around Britain on "Democracy" - a subject she also coached students in convent school.

In an interview in the Jew Chronicle she stated: "I do not believe in the existence of God as an external force. Every man establishes his own kind of religion. I'm biased, I suppose, but I brought up as a Jew, but I do not see any conception of God and ethical concepts are far, far superior to anything that anyone else created and that the Old Testament has contributed more to the establishment of law and culture in Western Europe than any other factor."

Her husband Leonard died in 1973, when he was 85. Kitty continued to live in the Temple Mount by judges and the H. Her visitors on her last birthday, two months before she died, were amazed at her clarity of thought and sharp decisions. At the West London Synagogue and the Westminster Synagogue she was involved in questions of ritual and of liturgy - and gave advice to the rabbis.

Albert H. Friedman

Sarah Kitzky, community leader and educator: born Petersburg, Jersey 9 November 1899; married 1928 Leonard Stein (died 1973); one son, and one son deceased; died London 5 January 1997.

Stein: 'that vast forever'

Lawrence A. Fleischman, art collector and philanthropist, died London 31 January, aged 71. A fund-raiser for the arts in America and Europe, in 1991 he funded the refurbishment of the Bassae Gallery at the British Museum and made subsequent donations for the redevelopment of two of the Parthenon galleries.

Tam Dalyell

Jose Ignacio Domecq, winemaker and taster: born Jerez, Spain 31 July 1914; married 1934 Angeles Fernandez de Bobadilla y Gonzalez (seven sons, five daughters); died Jerez 15 January 1997.

Marjorie Reynolds

"Marjorie Reynolds, a blonde newcomer," enthused Larry, "is a comely looker of much talent, poise and versatility, who will certainly calendar her own professional prominence from the springboard of this Crosby-Astaire musical." The curious use of the word "calendar" (to denote "gain") can be explained by the fact that the film under review was Irving Berlin's Holiday Inn (1942). The use of the word "newcomer" is also curious; the 21-year-old Miss Reynolds was then the veteran of more than 40 films, having made her screen debut 19 years earlier.

Born Marjorie Goodspeed, she was taken to Los Angeles as a small child and enrolled in dance classes by her ambitious mother. As Marjorie Moore, she was soon appearing on the silent screen with Ramon Navarro in Scaramouche (1923), and with Diana Dana in Revelation (1924). After a brief retirement, she returned to make her first talkie, John Barrymore's Svengali (1931). She played small roles in College Humour (1932) and The Big Broadcast of 1936 (1935), both of which started her future leading man Bing Crosby. After College Holiday (1936), Broadway Melody of 1938 and Champagne Waltz (both 1937), she appeared with Tex Ritter in Tex Rides With the Boy Scouts (1938), the first of 14 small-budget westerns she would make in the next four years, opposite such sagebrush stars as Buck Jones, Ken Maynard, Bob Baker, George O'Brien, Tim Holt and Roy Rogers. In between she toiled in equally low-rent thrillers.

Less than a week before Holiday Inn went into production, Paramount Pictures had yet to find a suitable leading lady. Their problem was solved when the choreographer Danny Dare recommended an actress/dancer with whom he had worked on various musicals. The studio wasted precious time searching for Marjorie Moore before learning that she'd changed her name in 1937, after marrying one Jack Reynolds.

Once they had found and screen-tested her, she was eagerly signed and flung into dance rehearsals with Fred Astaire. True, she wasn't much of a singer, but since when has that ever posed a problem to Hollywood? Martha Mears dubbed her vocals, and Paramount was so pleased with her performance in Holiday Inn that they awarded her a seven-year contract, and cast her opposite Crosby again in Dixie (1943), the alleged biography of the composer Dan Emmett, in which, as his loyal wife, she inspired the writing of the title song. She gave an impressive dramatic performance as a Viennese refugee in Fritz Lang's film version of Graham Greene's Ministry of Fear (1945), and made a ravishingly beautiful princess in the Bob Hope romp, Monsieur Beaucaire (1946). She was loaned to Universal for one of Abbott and Costello's better vehicles, The Time of Their Lives (1946), in which she and Costello played ghosts doomed to haunt a stately mansion until they had proved they weren't traitors during the American Revolution. In a clever special effect, the two ghosts had a head-on collision, but simply passed through, ending up wearing one another's clothes. Reynolds, who was pregnant throughout the filming, said later, "I just wanted to get it over with."

When her Paramount contract expired, she appeared in Mario Lanza's first starring film, That Midnight Kiss (1949), and then in a trio of "B" pictures that suggested the action quiches she ground out in the 1930s: Customs Agent, The Great Jewel Robbery and Rookie Fireman (all 1950). For MGM she made a film calculated to endear the studio to the House Un-American Activities Committee. Called Home Town Story (1951), and financed by a top executive of General Motors, it was the story of a liberal newspaper editor who learned that Big Business wasn't a heartless monolith, when his little sister was buried in a cave-in, and the owner of the town's largest firm organised her rescue. Marilyn Monroe made an early screen appearance in this oddity.

Reynolds entered television when William Bendix chose her to play his dutiful wife in the sitcom The Life of Riley (1953-58). After Riley, there were guest appearances in various television series, but few films. The last of which was The Silent Witness (1962).

In 1987, asked by a journalist from Classic Image magazine whether she would welcome a big screen comeback, Marjorie

Reynolds: 'I just wanted to get it over with' Photograph: Kobal

Reynolds replied, "Sure, I'd like to click and become a box office tornado, but, if I don't, I've got no kick coming. Personally, I like Hollywood and I like pictures. But that doesn't mean I have any illusions about either."

Marjorie Goodspeed (Marjorie Reynolds), actress: born Buhi, Idaho 12 August 1921; married 1937 Jack Reynolds (one daughter); marriage dissolved 1952; 1953 Jan M. Haffen (died 1985); died Manhattan Beach, California 1 February 1997.

Jose Ignacio Domecq

Don Jose Ignacio Domecq was the acknowledged king of sherry tasters and known as El Nariz, "the Nose", for his astonishing ability to sniff out the nuances in the creation of his family's wonderful sherries.

Tall and lean, he earned this name for literal as well as figurative reasons. His hawk-like nose was memorably large. It was also his great good fortune - an indispensable gift in the blending necessary for creating the best of all sherries. From his childhood he could memorise aromas and tastes ranging from the freshly pressed must of Palomino grapes to the rich, old dry sherries called Olorosos dating from the 17th century when the company was founded by an Irish farmer Patrick Murphy and one Juan Haurie.

The company rose to fame and fortune in the early 19th century when Ruskin, Telford, and Domecq were leaders in the British sherry trade. However the senior partner Ruskin's son, John, decided to make a life writing on art and architecture - which he did with famous effect. It was left to another partner, Pedro Domecq Lembaye, a relative of the Haurie family which had owned the firm since 1791, to expand the business. In 1816 Pedro Domecq quarrelled with the Haurie family, bought the business and renamed it Domecq after himself.

Domecq: 'The Nose'

Jose Domecq joined Domecq in 1939, became a member of the board in 1957 and from 1994 until December 1996 was on the main board of Allied Lyons Domecq.

In 1992, the all-party Heritage Group of peers and members of the House of Commons, paying our own way, and organised by our imaginative and energetic chairman, Sir Patrick Cormack MP, travelled to Spain. Highlights included two hours with King Juan Carlos, and meetings with members of the government and the opposition, the Mayor of Seville in Expo year, and with Don Jose Ignacio Domecq.

As we descended from our bus outside the winery - a colossal whitewashed warren of buildings, streets and cellars called "The Jerusalem of Jerez" - a septuagenarian Moto Guzzi Hispania motorbike, a Jack Russell dog (as always) in a basket on the back. He descended from his bike and greeted each of his guests with a ferocious handshake.

"The Nose" took us round his 2,500 acres of vineyards in Jerez superior from which come the well known sherry brands of Fino La Ina and the Double Century range. Afterwards we were shown his wonderful collection of Andalusian horses; he was an expert polo player well into his seventies.

But the crowning experience was being taken by Domecq into his vaults. They must be among the most spectacular cellars in the world and none of us will ever forget being given a taste of brandy made by the original Pedro Domecq in the year that Napoleon went to St Helena, 1816.

His young colleagues told us that Jose Domecq's personal skills as a blender were stupendous. In an essay for Christie's Wine Companion (1987) he wrote:

Strolling through the bodega dipping out old sherries which have rested undisturbed for generations, must be one of the most satisfying encounters a man can have with wine.

In the same essay he gave his view of the world thus:

In ancient bodegas one watches human egos come and go - all talking loudly about market trends etc in the jargon of the moment - while the wine ignores them all and silently ages, turning itself with our tacit guidance into the same lovely old perfection enjoyed by our ancestors.

In his book Sherry (1970), Julian Jeffs wrote:

At Domecq's bodega there is a cask of Palomino that is well over 200 years old; it has, of course, been refreshed from time to time with old wine of the same style, but it is now practically black and is so strong in flavour that it cannot be drunk unless blended with a younger wine.

Domecq was clearly tickled by seeing the British parliamentarians and their wives grinning at the smallest taste of this ancient brew.

An Anglophile Spanish aristocrat, Domecq was a frequent visitor to London. When not in his vintner's laboratory or tending his properties all over Jerez, his second home was the Bay of Geddes where he pursued his passion for sailing. His ashes were sprinkled over the waters of his beloved bay.

Jose Domecq had style. Five days before he died of lung cancer he had the energy to remove his oxygen mask and drink what he called "La Penultima Capita". He fought ferociously to protect the good name of "sherry" against non-Spanish imitations, and won the war of nomenclature in Brussels in 1994 in establishing his point by European Directive (British sherry henceforth had to be described as "British fortified wine"). His only sadness was that in the same year his firm had to come under the control of the vast multi-national Allied Lyons Drinks Co.

Tam Dalyell

Jose Ignacio Domecq, vintner and taster: born Jerez, Spain 31 July 1914; married 1934 Angeles Fernandez de Bobadilla y Gonzalez (seven sons, five daughters); died Jerez 15 January 1997.

No authority can be exercised without dialogue

faith &amp; reason

On Ash Wednesday a group of radical Catholics challenged Cardinal Basil Hume to return the Catholic Church to the spirit of the Second Vatican Council. Elizabeth Stuart endorses the call.

Now a world-wide "We Are Church" movement has formed which seeks to recall the ecclesiastical hierarchy to the vision of the Council and initiate dialogue on issues such as the nature of priesthood and sexuality. This includes in Britain a coalition of Catholic groups, the Jubilee People, who are circulating a "Declaration" of desired reforms.

In response Cardinal Hume quite rightly warned against a constant appeal to personal conscience in matters of morality. For a Catholic (or indeed a Christian) moral decisions are always made in the context of, and informed by, the community of faith. Indeed, many Catholics may have left the Church precisely because they were encouraged by their pastors to exercise their personal conscience in matters of birth control whilst the hierarchy continued to teach its sinfulness.

But if overdependence upon private judgement is incompatible with the Catholic ethos so too is the Cardinal's statement that "there comes a point where obedience is demanded and docility to the mind of the Magisterium is the proper attitude to adopt." This week the "We Are Church" movement wrote an open letter to Cardinal Hume in response.

The Vatican Council grounded its theology of authority in the concept of servanthood. The full implications of this were not drawn out by the Council but were taken up by feminist and liberation theologians: leaders do not own power but hold it on behalf of a community to whom they are accountable for its use. The language of servanthood and force is mutually incompatible. In the life of Trinity we have a model of a community, sharing and exchanging power, of dynamic dialogue within God's self which should be reflected in His people.

The root meaning of the word authority is "to cause to grow or enlarge, to increase". Dialogue is a necessary prerequisite to the exercise of authority. For how is the Church to know what diminishes and what enlarges the dignity of gay people and women unless it engages in dialogue with those within and without its walls? How can a Church conclude women priests to be a theological impossibility without first carefully listening to the experience of those sister churches which have admitted women to the priesthood? The Council acknowledged that the spirit of revelation and the quality of catholicity were not confined to the Roman Church?

Authentic dialogue changes all parties and the reform groups should be prepared to end up in a place very different from where they started - a should the hierarchy. Dialogue through letters has a venerable history in the Christian Church: it is how St Paul worked and refined the theology which was to become the foundation of so much Christian belief and practice. His theology is the product of dialogue with his communities.

How appropriate it therefore is that the latest exchange in the dialogue between the Cardinal and the Jubilee People should take place on Ash Wednesday, when the whole Church dons ashes as a visible sign by the body of Christ that it has failed to be what it is called to be, the pilgrim people of God, living out in its own being the radical mutuality, equality, and power sharing of the Holy Trinity.

• Faith & Reason is edited by Paul Valley

Births, Marriages &amp; Deaths

DEATHS

ASHLEY: Judith Ann Elizabeth, 40, died of cancer on 11 February, 1997, at home on Sunday 9 February. The funeral will take place at St Peter's Church, Oadby on Wednesday 19 February at 2.30pm. The interment will follow at St Andrew's Church, Wellingborough, on Thursday 20 February at 2pm. Simple flowers and/or donations to the Leicestershire Macmillan Society may be sent to A.J. Atkinson & Son FD, 12 London Rd., Oadby, Leicestershire, LE2 5DG.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

PUFFETT: A memorial service for Dr Derrick Robert Puffett, Fellow of St John's College, Cambridge, 1984-96 and formerly University Lecturer in Music, will be held in St John's College Chapel on Saturday 1 March 1997 at 12 noon.

IN MEMORIAM

BONNICE: Susan Bonnice died on 1 February 1996. Remembered with love.

For Gazette BIRTHS, MARRIAGES & DEATHS please telephone 0171-293 2010.

Changing of the Guard

TODAY: The Household Cavalry Mounted Regiment mounts the Queen's Life Guard at Horse Guards, London. TOMORROW: The Household Cavalry Mounted Regiment mounts the Queen's Life Guard at Horse Guards, London. TOMORROW: The Household Cavalry Mounted Regiment mounts the Queen's Life Guard at Horse Guards, London.

Birthdays

TODAY: Mr Clive Aslet, Editor, Country Life; 42: Sir Nicholas Bayne, former High Commissioner to Canada; 60: Sir Harold Beoley, former ambassador; 88: Sir William Bentley, chairman, Society of Pastors' Consultants; 70: Miss Claire Bloom, actress; 60: Sir Stephen Brown, former chairman, Stone-Platt Industries; 91: Mr Derek Conway MP; 44: Mr Dan Crompton, former Chief Constable, Nottinghamshire; 56: Sir Maurice Drake, former High Court Judge; 74: Mr Frank Dunlop, former Director-General of the Edinburgh Festival; 70: Mr Paul Ferris, author and journalist; 68: Mr John Greenway MP; 51: Mr Gerald Harper, actor; 68: Miss Diana Jones, jockey; 47: Professor Andrew Miller, Principal, Stirling University; 61: Mr Charles Needham, former chairman, Coalite; 73: Sir Richard O'Brien, former chairman, Manpower Services Commission; 77: Sir William Reid, the Ombudsman; 60: Miss Jane Seymour, actress; 46: Miss Claire Short MP; 51: Mr Peter Squire, former Headmaster, Bedford Modern School; 60: Mr John Stainer, musician; 82: Sir Adrian Swire, chairman, John Swire & Sons Ltd; 65: Sir Alan Ward, a Lord Justice of Appeal; 59: The Right Rev Robert Woods, Assistant Bishop, Gloucester; 83.

TOMORROW: Miss Patti Andrews, singer (of the Andrews Sisters); 77: Mr Patrick Bailey, former director, Gatwick and Stansted Airports; 72: Mr Paul Bailey, novelist; 60: Mr Jeremy Bulloch, actor; 52: Professor Robin Clark, Sir William Ramsay Professor of Chemistry, University College London; 62: Mrs Stella

Clarke, chairman of council, Bristol University; 65: Mr Frederick Cunningham, painter; 67: Sir Anthony Dowell, senior principal and director of the Royal Ballet; 54: Mr David Griffiths, portrait painter; 58: Mr Peter Hain MP; 47: Mr Peter Hobday, radio presenter; 60: Mr Mike Holding, cricketer; 43: Mr Elihu Inbal, conductor; 60: Mr Ian Lavender, actor; 51: Professor Jack Levy, engineer; 71: Mrs Anne Lonsdale, President, New Hall, Cambridge; 56: Mr John McEnroe, tennis player; 38: Mr Gerard Mansell, former Deputy Director-General of the BBC; 76: Mr John Moore, Headmaster, St Dunstan's College, Bedford; 54: Mr Francois-Navier Ortel, former EEC Vice-President, economic and financial affairs; 72: Mr Peter Porter, poet; 68: Mr John Schlesinger, film director; 71: Sir James Swaffield, former Director-General and Clerk to the GLC; 73: Sir Peter Webster, former High Court judge; 75.

Anniversaries

TODAY: Births: Galileo Galilei, astronomer and mathematician, 1564. Deaths: Cardinal Nicholas Nat "King" Cole (Nathaniel Adams Cole), singer and musician, 1965. Today is the Feast Day of St Agathe of Terni. St Sigid of Vago, St Tanco or Tano and St Walid or Galfrid. TOMORROW: Births: Glamorgan Bodoni, printer and typographer, 1740. Deaths: Sir Isaac Leslie Horne-Belisha, first Baron Horne-Belisha, statesman, 1977. Tomorrow is the Feast Day of Saints Elias, Jeremy and their Companions, St Gilbert of Sempringham, St Juliana of Cumae and St Onesimus the Slave.

1520 من الامم

A small neighbour that we have failed

On a mild Saturday morning in a relatively comfortable, relatively secure Britain, Albania is doubtless far from the minds of most of our readers. It is far from the minds of most people. That is one reason why it has degenerated so rapidly into such a nasty mess.

Albania has, admittedly, been a nasty mess for most of the last 50 years. When its people rose up to throw the Communists out of power, they hoped it could be otherwise. But President Sali Berisha and his Democratic Party, once the bright hopes of south-eastern Europe, have succumbed to the temptations of power.

For a long time, only two things about Albanians were well-known in Britain: one, that their election results were implausibly one-sided; two, that Norman Wisdom was a national hero.

Now we need to pay more serious attention. A third fact has come to the nation's attention: the place is run by gangsters. Yesterday and today, we report a fourth important fact: our Government and our governing party have supported these gangsters, long after it should have become obvious to them that they were up to their elbows in corruption.

Along with all the peoples of Eastern Europe, Albanians were made this promise by the West: "Come into the family of democcratic nations, and we will help you to obtain the fruits of liberty and capitalism." That promise has been betrayed. In their naivety, Albanians elected a pyramid-seller as president. His slogan was: "Put your investment in the Democratic Party. It can only go higher." It should have been obvious in the west that the interest offered on government-backed accounts was unsustainable and would ultimately damage faith in the free market and democracy.

Now Albania has become a gangster state where democracy is once again a sick joke, the opposition can expect to be beaten up and imprisoned, with an economy based on smuggling, exploitation, drugs and extortion.

There are many reasons why this has been allowed to happen. We are ignorant of countries like Albania, and in the post-Cold War gloaming most of us (and many politicians and public servants) don't really want to bother about what seems a peripheral country. For those who did take an interest, helping the countries of Eastern Europe to move smoothly to democracy was a laudable aim. But politicians have to make a judgement about whom they are helping. And it seems that some of the more zealous on the political right saw Albania in out-of-date terms. Once the Communists were pitched out of power, the right was the only bulwark of democracy and capitalism, in their view. An authoritarian conservative like Sali Berisha seemed preferable to a return to the days of Communism. Now we know that the intelligence agencies have been reporting back to national capitals for some time that the situation in Albania was deplorable. People have not listened.

Others might have worse reasons for turning a blind eye: it seems likely that some people in Europe have found it profitable to let corruption run rife in a small, obscure corner of south-eastern Europe while money is made.

The United States, to give it credit, seems to have realised that things were going wrong. Europe, and especially France and Italy, have been blind; Britain and Germany are dithering. This country is on our doorstep, and we should care more that it is an unjust place. More concretely, drug-smuggling through Albania, political disintegration and money-laundering give us plenty of reasons to do something about it.

Britain is further away, but we have been culpable all the same. The Government went out of its way to be nice to Mr Berisha when the going was good, and it has not done much to change its line now things have gone wrong.

There is no reason to think that British policy has been motivated by a desire to see gangsters in power. But it is clear that a preference for a right-winger has created a blind spot. Britain likes stability in the Mediterranean, and has done for a century; and stability often means injustice. Having a friend in Tirana – a man who professed sympathy with the goals and values of Conservatism, and with Britain, must have seemed attractive.

There is a much broader point here than the direction of British foreign policy in the Balkans. Albania is not the only country drifting back into a nightmare. Throughout the world, many of the states that have emerged blinking into the daylight from the rubble of the Soviet Union and its satellites are now sliding back into the darkness again. In most cases, it is the same combination of indolent ignorance and short-sighted self-interest on the part of the West that is responsible.

A world where gangsters rule will not be a pleasant one. But that is what we face if situations like that in Albania are allowed to flourish. The solution pressed upon us by the professionals – rebuild our defences, throw a few million pounds more at the security services – will not address this problem. Organised crime and its links to politics is one of the biggest problems which we face in the world today, and ministers remind us of that almost daily. If by their failure they have encouraged it, then we want to know.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Senior officers call for tighter curbs on arms exports

Sir: The Scott Report into the arms-to-Iraq scandal, published a year ago today, demonstrated the urgent need for a stricter approach to weapons transfers. The case for restraint is often argued on humanitarian grounds. What is not stated is that our own armed forces are endangered by ill-conceived exports. This is a powerful rationale for stricter export controls.

There are compelling military reasons for tightly regulating arms sales to regions of tension and instability. The "boomerang effect" by resulting in European troops being armed with weapons supplied by their own governments in peace-keeping operations in Somalia, Rwanda and Bosnia. During the Gulf war, Allied forces faced the heavily armed Iraqi forces, equipped as a result of the export of arms and military equipment from the European Union in the 1980s.

It is important that our forces have the best weapons available, but it is often argued that in order to subsidise the cost of developing new technology we need to export new weapons systems. With constrained defence budgets, the export potential of new projects is now a major consideration for any future development. For example, the UK government is already marketing the Eurofighter in the Middle East before the project has reached completion. By freely exporting the same weapons used by our own forces we are arming potential future opponents and so

British troops in the Gulf war – facing European weapons in Iraqi hands have to develop more new equipment to retain any technological edge. Unilateral approaches to restraint are often confounded by a fear of loss of trade – "If we don't do it someone else will". Tougher control and restraint measures are therefore required at a national, European, and international level. Support continues to build for the introduction of a code of conduct on the arms trade at the ongoing EU Inter-Governmental Conference. Accompanied by similar initiatives in the US and the UN, the introduction of such a code would significantly reduce the levels of human rights abuses, conflict, death and destruction caused by irresponsible arms exports to repressive regimes and regions of tension. The code of conduct would also help safeguard the lives of our own forces. The opportunity to implement an EU code of conduct exists now – but it needs the support of Britain. We would urge the Government to support this initiative. General Sir HUGH BEACH Field Marshal Lord CARVER Admiral Sir JAMES EBERLE London WC1

Drop the futile 'war on drugs'

Sir: The ridiculously out-dated 1971 Misuse of Drugs Act is patently not stopping the great British public from consuming ever greater quantities by criminalising their use ("Trainspotting: the reality", 13 February).

The new Home Office report demonstrates that government policy is giving £600m per year to violent criminal gangs in London alone every year. I propose the Government legalise cannabis, tax it, and use the money to subsidise proper education and harm-reduction campaigns against hard drugs.

Though the public has accepted that drug-taking is as commonplace as, and safer than, many legal activities, the Government continues in its futile War On Drugs, denying any debate – even on the subject of medicinal cannabis.

JON THOMPSON Macclesfield, Cheshire

Sir: Once again we hear of starving refugees. Once again the world's governments and the UN ignore a vital food supply – easy to grow, two to three crops a year, grows almost anywhere, no pesticides or artificial fertilisers.

For thousands of years much of the human race survived from cannabis seed, using it to make gruel and bread. Today the plant is banned almost everywhere, seemingly because those in power do not want people to get high. The many medicinal uses of cannabis are similarly ignored.

Surely the "high" of cannabis is not the real reason, considering that dangerous and addictive alcohol is legal. Could it be pressures from the companies which make ineffective synthetic drugs, pesticides and herbicides, diesel and plastics? Hemp grown for fibre (the word "cannabis" comes from the Dutch word for hemp), paper, fuel, oil, paints, and medicines, is cheaper, better and with no pollution.

More reasons to vote for a Legalise Cannabis candidate in the election. JACK GRIFFIN Chairman, Campaign to Legalise Cannabis International Association Norwich

Turn-around

Sir: In the depths of the recession, 1991-1992, each criticism of government policy was met with the mantra, "We wish we could do something about it but the world is in recession: these things are beyond our control." Now that the global economy is on a better footing (oh yes, and an election approaching in the UK) the same bunch are claiming all the credit.

SIMON CALLEN Little Gaddesden, Hertfordshire

Stealing history

Sir: While innumerable foreign artefacts lie in the British Museum it becomes as a nation to call any other collector a thief ("Pictures that grove the guilt of Moshe Dayan", 14 February). We should, in just reparation, donate a properly earthquake-resistant museum to Athens to house the Parthenon Marbles.

PAMELA DONOHUE Sheffield

Brain capacity

Sir: With reference to the discussion about the relative brain size of women and men (Technoquest, 10 February; Letters, 13 February), surely there is a correlation here with other parts of the human anatomy? It's not the size that matters, but what you do with it.

MARGARET BROOKES-TULLETT Horsham, West Sussex

LETTER from THE EDITOR

"Trial by newspaper" is the emotive, tossed-about term for much of what modern papers do – it is what red-faced MPs snarl when cornered, as in the Neil Hamilton case. We were conducting "trial by newspaper" yesterday morning on the front page, when we attacked Western politicians over the gangster-state of Albania, and we continue the prosecution with this morning's edition.

We did call OJ Simpson a murderer on the front page, and some readers objected but that followed a civil case which had in effect convicted him as a killer. In most examples, "trial by newspaper" is really a shorthand for journalistic finger-pointing and we assume that proper legal or political process will follow – that Parliament will act, or that a criminal prosecution will be brought.

But the jaw-dropping behaviour of The Daily Mail yesterday is in another league. By naming five unconvicted men as the murderers of Stephen Lawrence and challenging them to sue, it acted as a revolutionary tribunal of public opinion.

My instinctive reaction was an admiring gasp: it was a journalistic coup de theatre which chimed with what many people thought. Getting a murder prosecution in the climate of fear surrounding the case, with the accused refusing to answer, had proved impossible. So the Mail went ahead and, following the brave Lawrence family's crusade, convicted them anyway.

The hard truth is that newspapers are not juries, nor are editors judges. We get above ourselves at our peril: the Mail's challenge to "sue us if you dare" summons the blood, but conceals the huge disparity of financial forces that would then come into play. Knowing that, and having slung the placard "murderer" round five free men, what does the Mail think should happen next? What if they were lynched? There are scores of trials every week which end in a way someone thinks unjust: how would it feel if newspapers took even half of them up, in this way? Or if the accused killers were black?

Criminal standards of evidence can be frustrating, occasionally infuriating, but they are an essential civil protection against injustice – and that can create other injustices. It's a bad system, but better than any of the others. Being a journalist is great fun and a great privilege, but there is a sense of hubris about the trade which is becoming unsettling. The line between fearlessly accusing and simple bullying blurs very easily.

Now: a shameless puff, a piece of free advertising, a blatant abuse of my editorial position. An Ipswich-based publisher,

The hard truth is that newspapers are not juries, nor are editors judges. We get above ourselves at our peril

the Golgonooza Press, has produced a collection of essays by an elderly Kentucky tobacco farmer by the name of Wendell Berry – it's called Standing on Earth. So? Well, Berry is something special, a wise and radical writer on man's relations with the planet. He produces poetry, essays, short stories, travel diaries and novels. He writes "about" education, farming, poetry, religion, energy and marriage but they all merge into one another and the overall effect is of a brilliant and seamless intelligence roving through the most difficult challenges of the modern world. Even where you completely disagree with Berry (as I do, about quite a lot) you know you are in the printed presence of an extraordinary mind. How does he write? A little as one imagines Jefferson might if he were alive today. One of my thwarted ambitions was to edit a selection of Berry for a British audience. Now, instead, all I need to do is recommend this one.

Andrew Marr

QUOTE UNQUOTE

The level of alcohol consumed at these lunches makes it unlikely that those attending them could do any work in the afternoon, let alone stand up – Gordon Sutton, District Auditor, reporting on junkies by Labour councillors in Doncaster

I don't want to join in this circus atmosphere that's out there at this time – OJ Simpson, refusing to comment on the $21m in damages a jury ordered him to pay after deciding he killed his ex-wife and her friend

It's like a fresh, clean page in 1997 for me, and I hope in my travels I may be able to inspire other people to keep fighting and have courage – the Duchess of York, telling US television viewers she has her debts and her weight under control

It really makes you want to burst into tears. Who said I'm lining up with Labour? I am a humanitarian figure, always have been, always will be – Diana, Princess of Wales

I'm not getting married today. I'm in bed – Liam Gallagher, rock star

One of the few things on which all marketing academics and practitioners agree is that if the product is rubbish, no amount of hype will make it sell. The Referendum Party is a textbook example – Prof Patrick Barwise, London Business School

Why go out for a hamburger when you can have steak at home? – Paul Newman, actor on being faithful to his wife, Joanne Woodward

Failed IRA suspect and her baby

Sir: The suggestion ("IRA suspect to be handcuffed during birth", 13 February) that Roisin McAisley is to be handcuffed during the birth of her child is completely untrue.

The Prison Service made clear in January 1996 that women would not be handcuffed during childbirth. Appropriate security arrangements will always be put in place, but once a prisoner goes into hospital for the purpose of giving birth, any restraints are removed until such time as the prisoner is moved from the hospital back to prison.

This policy applies equally to Roisin McAisley. RICHARD TILT Director General HM Prison Service London SW1

Sir: We wish to express our dismay at the refusal, yet again, to grant bail to Roisin McAisley.

It is impossible to imagine a justification for keeping an asthmatic, pregnant young woman in conditions which include being strip-searched twice daily, as well as before and after visits, in which in any case physical contact is precluded.

We concur in Amnesty's judgement that any arrangement resulting in a separation of mother and baby following the birth would amount to cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment for both.

We urge the Home Secretary to act immediately to ensure a humane outcome in this tragic case. The Rev Professor PATRICK HANNON Chairman Irish Commission for Prisoners Overseas Dublin

Sir: Whether or not Roisin McAisley is guilty of any crime, her baby is certainly innocent. To sentence it to be separated from its natural carer and best food-source is nothing less than wicked.

JANET BARLOW Ravenstonedale, Cumbria

Media folk give marriage a bad press

Sir: Virginia Ironside's sad piece on marriage (12 February) instances her own and others' distress. She writes of her sense "I" being taken over by the "we" and concludes that for many people the institution of marriage is now simply too difficult to sustain.

I wonder if this is true for a higher percentage of journalists and media people than for others. People in these professions need to be individualistic: only if they have their own different voice are they likely to succeed in such a high-pressure competitive environment. Perhaps the very talents needed for this success make it hard to achieve the balance of "I" and "we" needed for marriage.

This would be a matter for themselves alone, except that they form a crucial part of the social climate – the ideas and outlook around all of us. Lack of belief in the sustainability of marriage may be an important factor in making marriage more difficult for all of us.

Normal bumpy patches come to be seen as a sign of incompatibility, so the partnership should be ended. Sometimes this is necessary; often it is not. Given a climate in which difficulties can be thought about (perhaps with some outside help) rather than acted upon, many of us can find constructive ways of balancing the "I" and "we". Amazingly, over 60 per cent of us still do sustain marriage or long-term partnerships. Let's celebrate that.

PAT BURFORD St. Alban's, Hertfordshire

Sir: I read the recent proposals for a ten- or five-year marriage contract ("Thousands do it, but is it time we reformed marriage?", 10 February) with a sense of déjà vu. In the foreword to his novel Brave New World (1932), Aldous Huxley writes:

There are already certain American cities in which the number of divorces is equal to the number of marriages. In a few years, no doubt, marriage licenses will be sold like dog licences, good for a period of twelve months, with no law against changing dogs or keeping more than one animal at a time.

One wonders whether his other predictions will also come true. A LEWIS Winslow, Cheshire

In Scotland, the mail always gets through

Sir: It must be different in England and Wales, judging by the recent readers' letters complaining of poor deliveries of first-class mail. We live at the end of a half-mile of steep farm track; the only visible habitation is the farm itself, a quarter mile below our house. The mail arrives at the door daily, usually by 8am, often containing letters posted the previous day by one of our daughters in rural Devon or rural Northumberland.

Please, Lord, don't allow them to privatise the Post Office; many in Scotland would lose a treasured service. DEREK FABIAN Milton, Strathclyde

Sir: The best way would be for all mail to be stamped second class. The Post Office could not possibly allow a build-up of delayed mail if this was done. When the iniquitous two-tier system was introduced I resisted it for some in the end succumbed. I shall in future stamp all my letters second class, including this one.

ALISON LEAKEY Welwyn Garden City, Hertfordshire This letter, dated 12 February, arrived on 14 February

Archives in danger of being broken up? We can help

Sir: Professor Buchanan (Letters, 14 February) calls for a national agency to control the "degeneration of the national heritage" exemplified by the break-up of nationally important archives in the safe room.

The Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts does already offer many of the services that Professor Buchanan supposes not to be available. It is, for example, one of our principal duties to "identify the owners of archival material with high heritage value" and subject to their consent to maintain a publicly available record of their holdings in the National Register of Archives, whose indexes are now widely available on the Internet (<http://www.hmc.gov.uk>) as well as in the public search room here.

We are always willing to advise owners about the disposal of their archives by gift, sale or loan to appropriate national or local repositories, if this is what they want.

We also regularly offer free guidance to owners who wish to retain their archives. A vital advisory role is also played by organisations such as the British Records Association and the Business Archives Council, the Contemporary Medical Archives Centre at the Wellcome Institute and the National Cataloguing Unit for the Archives of Contemporary Scientists at Professor Buchanan's own former department, not to mention the network of local authority record offices.

We can also put repositories in touch with potential grant-awarding bodies and alert the latter to any major sales known to be pending.

What neither the Commission nor any of its partners in the field can do is to compel an owner to consult us or prevent the sale of an archive in separate lots if that is the owner's chosen course.

CHRISTOPHER KITCHING Secretary, The Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts London WC2

Letters should be addressed to Letters to the Editor, The Independent, One Canada Square, Canary Wharf, London E14 5DL. (Fax: 0171-293 2456; e-mail: letters@independent.co.uk) and include a daytime telephone number. Letters may be edited for length and clarity. We regret we are unable to acknowledge unpublished letters.

the saturday story

Murdered because he was black

After Stephen Lawrence died in a 'racist attack', the police ran into a wall of silence. Peter Popham explains why

Can black people expect justice in Britain? Nearly four years after it happened, the murder of Stephen Lawrence confronts the nation's ethnic minorities with that stark question.

They have looked on while high-profile cases such as the murder in Somers Town, north London, of the white boy Richard Everitt by a gang of Bengali youths, or the murder of west London headmaster Phillip Lawrence were brought with brutal efficiency to conviction and sentence. In both cases, the culprits got life.

But in the case of Stephen Lawrence, stabbed to death at a bus stop in Eltham, south London, every recourse has ended in failure and frustration. The Crown Prosecution Service dropped the prosecution of two youths in mid-trial, citing insufficient evidence. The private prosecution brought by the Lawrence family failed last year on the same grounds.

It started out as a strictly south London news story, but each futile trip through the legal system intensified media interest, because there are few things we like more than a real-life soap. But when the case got back into the headlines yesterday at the end of the long-postponed inquest, it was the same old story – unlawful killing, yes; an "unprovoked racist attack by five white youths", no less – the coroner's jury going out on a limb in spelling it out so clearly. But no convictions, no sentences, no justice.

We were also treated to the spectacle of the Daily Mail metamorphosing – abracadabra – into a sudden champion of the downtrodden minorities, calling the five white youths "murderers", pure and simple, and daring them to sue the Mail if they denied it was true. This was rare and strange, refreshing or nauseating according to taste, and certainly grabbed the attention. But justice it ain't – neither for Stephen Lawrence nor for those suspected of killing him. In fact, if the Mail's crusade caused a further civil case against the five named youths to be aborted, it would have had precisely the opposite effect to that which the paper claims to intend.

Stephen Lawrence, an A-level student whose parents came to Britain from Jamaica, was standing at a bus stop on 22 April 1993 with a friend when a gang of white youths ran up to them, calling "What, what, nigger?" and one of them stabbed him fatally with what was later described as a 10-inch knife. Stephen and his friend ran 200 yards to try to escape, but Stephen collapsed and died from loss of blood.

It is the police's activity or lack of it over subsequent hours and days that is at the heart of much of the Lawrence family's anger over the handling of the case. Why did the police, who arrived at the scene as Stephen lay dying, not immediately launch a hunt for the killers? Why did they seem more interested in quizzing his family about any possibility of criminality in Stephen's own background (there was none) than in tracking down the guilty? As Stephen's mother Doreen put it in a statement read outside the coroner's court by her sister on Thursday: "Right from the start on the night our son was murdered, it seemed that in the minds of the police, he was only a black boy – why bother?" she said.

Of course, this version of police thinking is vigorously rejected by the police themselves. "Words simply cannot express the enormous sympathy we have for the Lawrence family," Metropolitan Police Assistant Commissioner Ian Johnston said, pointing out that 2,600 people have been interviewed in the inquiry and 70 suspects investigated.

The view that the police were themselves guilty of a sort of passive racism during the investigation, of inertia and lack of ardour in bringing the case to a conclusion, may be quite wrong. We have no way of knowing. But it is thoroughly understandable. And the only way to prevent such a suspicion forming would have been to move heaven and earth to see that justice was done.

There is, for instance, the question of witness protection. The youths accused and then acquitted of the murder, and who the Mail now names as murderers, were members of a gang of white, jobless school dropouts who got their kicks, and doubtless their twisted self-esteem, from assaulting blacks, painting racist graffiti and so on. They fancied themselves as gangsters; two of them, Neil and Jamie Acourt, modelled themselves on the Kray brothers, and like the Krays, their reputation relied on creating a mood of fear within their territory. In this, they seem to have been successful; although they were considered prime suspects in the murder by people in the neighbourhood, nobody had the courage to make a statement incriminating them.

Stephen Lawrence: killed by those who took furtive territoriality and turned it into a perverted crusade

Witness protection is expensive and much in demand, and it is arguable that, because the accused were not serious professional criminals but only nasty young punks, it would have been inappropriate to spend much on protecting witnesses in this case. One witness was protected, at a cost of thousands of pounds, but refused to co-operate further when his name became known.

With hindsight, and considering the damage that has been done by the case to relations between police and ethnic minorities, much more of this should have been done; if it had been, it might have elicited a statement sufficiently damaging to bring about a conviction. Instead, the lack of forensic evidence or solid testimony added to the wall of silence thrown up by the accused since May 1993, caused public and private prosecutions to collapse.

Yet an even more worrying thought is that even if there had been witness protection, Stephen Lawrence's killers might have got away with it. At issue is a subject most of us probably consider too primitive to concern us much – territoriality. Yet if the theory and practice of ethnic cleansing can drag the politics of an ostensibly modern European country such as ex-Yugoslavia into war and catastrophe, then territoriality, mostly unseen, often elaborately genteel in its manifestations, remains a power in our land, too.

In middle-class suburbs, they twitch the lace curtains, spell words out with painful slowness as if their coloured interlocutor were inevitably a cretin. The chatter in the pub dies away when the black man walks in; heads turn, then turn back, and nothing is said.

Evasiveness and hypocrisy are the classic middle-class response to the challenge of a multi-ethnic society; yank little Johnny out of the local school, not for racial reasons, God forbid, but to give him the best possible start in life with those who share his values. Move house yourself for cleaner air, bigger garden, less crime – never, ever, to get away from the festering racial tensions of the inner city.

In the East End, the white working class has fled in huge numbers for the outer suburbs, the Green Belt and the pale wastes of deepest Essex, and race has been an important factor in this Great Trek – hence the popularity of the politics of the like of Norman words out with painful slowness as if their coloured interlocutor were inevitably a cretin. The chatter in the pub dies away when the black man walks in; heads turn, then turn back, and nothing is said.

Evasiveness and hypocrisy are the classic middle-class response to the challenge of a multi-ethnic society; yank little Johnny out of the local school, not for racial reasons, God forbid, but to give him the best possible start in life with those who share his values. Move house yourself for cleaner air, bigger garden, less crime – never, ever, to get away from the festering racial tensions of the inner city.

In the East End, the white working class has fled in huge numbers for the outer suburbs, the Green Belt and the pale wastes of deepest Essex, and race has been an important factor in this Great Trek – hence the popularity of the politics of the like of Norman words out with painful slowness as if their coloured interlocutor were inevitably a cretin. The chatter in the pub dies away when the black man walks in; heads turn, then turn back, and nothing is said.

Evasiveness and hypocrisy are the classic middle-class response to the challenge of a multi-ethnic society; yank little Johnny out of the local school, not for racial reasons, God forbid, but to give him the best possible start in life with those who share his values. Move house yourself for cleaner air, bigger garden, less crime – never, ever, to get away from the festering racial tensions of the inner city.

In the East End, the white working class has fled in huge numbers for the outer suburbs, the Green Belt and the pale wastes of deepest Essex, and race has been an important factor in this Great Trek – hence the popularity of the politics of the like of Norman Tebbit in places like Chingford, where many of them fetched up.

Eltham in south London is another such place. With its ribbon development of 1930s semis, it might look bleak to many people, but to anyone coming here from the tower blocks and mean terraces of the East End, it is the promised land. And Eltham's young thugs have taken it upon themselves to keep the milk and honey for their own kind.

Dr Mark Johnson, senior researcher at the Centre for Research in Ethnic Relations at the University of Warwick grew up nearby. "The young working-class white kids in Eltham have seen places north of Eltham such as Deptford going black, and they see themselves as trying to hold the line," he says. "People will tell you blacks are buying houses north of the South Circular Road, but not here yet. These are people who have got out of the East End and gone slightly up in the world, and they want to keep things the way they are."

Young hooligans to the outside world, in their own imaginations they are protecting their community from alien incursion. They are taking the furtive, tacit, disguised territoriality that permeates our society and turning it into a perverted crusade. While some potential witnesses in the Stephen Lawrence murder case may have held their tongues out of fear, others probably did so in a gesture of solidarity.

Certain things have improved in Eltham since that terrible day three years ago. Makhan Bajwa, director of the Greenwich Council for Racial Equality, points to the unit operated jointly by the local authority and the police which investigates all racial attacks in the borough, and whose clear-up rate for racial attacks last year rose from 29 per cent to 44 per cent. A "professional witness scheme" to bring evidence in cases of racial harassment was launched recently, and there is a 24-hour helpline for harassment victims.

In ways such as these, the lives of the self-styled champions of white communities are made more difficult. But the fundamental problem doesn't go away. Stephen Lawrence's killers remain free. Racial incidents in England and Wales rose by three per cent in 1995-6 to a total of 12,222. Whether up or down, the rampant and flaunting ten-inch knives, or buried in comfortable layers of self-deceit and obfuscation, the primitive urge for territorial monopoly survives. Until we confront and defeat it, justice for Britain's blacks will remain a scarce commodity.

CORK & KERRY. BEAT THE CLOCK!

SLEEP OVER
ARRIVING AT 7am

SAVE OVER
400 MILES OF DRIVING

MIDWEEK RETURN FROM
£155
CAR & FERRY ADULTS
Available March 10th - May 21st
Excluding Easter

For ferry passage, holiday brochure and reservations, telephone

01792 - 456116
or contact your local travel agent

SWANSEA CORK FERRIES

Miles ahead of the the rest

jo brand's week

I was at the Comedy Store in London last Friday night and the subject of the McCall/Lewis fight came up. As all the other acts were performing there the following night when it was on (the dressing room has a telly with Sky), they decided they would all watch it. Then the words "pay per view" floated into the air and everyone's face dropped as this is felt by most people to be a big BSkyB con. A couple of days later, I was speaking to another friend who had really wanted to watch the fight, but wasn't prepared to fork out the extra tennor. This situation will become more and more common until only sports are left that are so dull no one is prepared to pay extra to watch them. Bows? Carriage driving à la Prince Philip? Lacrosse? These are what will be left to the poor old BSkyB viewers. How to change this, though? Unfortunately, the only thing that will force BSkyB to back down is if enough people boycott "pay per view". Well, pigs might fly, I suppose.

The first all-women expedition is about to set off for the North Pole after several months of gruelling training. I can think of many, many things I would rather do than months of gruelling training, let alone the actual expedition. Unfortunately, British expeditions through big snow don't have a great history. Captain Scott having been pipped at the post by the Norwegians at the South Pole and poor old Sir Ranulph Fiennes suffering first off from too much snow and then frost-bite. The expedition is sponsored by Penguin, the chocolate bar people, and I suppose chocolate is more appropriate than, say, hairspray or lingerie. The women are taking 7,000 Penguins with them... a mere coffee break for some of us. I think these women will stick together. I can't see any of this "I may be gone some time" business happening. It's refreshing to see women getting their teeth into traditionally male pursuits and, if this continues, the accumulation of female achievements will impress men shortly before hell freezes over.

The French town of Vitrolles near Marseilles now has a National Front mayor, Catherine Megret, who looks set to try and leave her mark by continuing the self-righteous discrimination of her party. Most of the prejudice is directed towards those of North African descent, many of whom were actually born in France. This legitimised racism, to me, has nothing to do with the concept of what the NF seems to think are white civil liberties, because, by its very nature, it impinges upon the civil liberties of others. The film footage of a load of smug, middle-aged French people cheering the result of the vote made me angry, but not as angry as I feel about the corruption of the previous socialist mayor whose shenanigans created this situation to a great extent. How you can vote for the socialists and then change your vote next time round to the National Front. I do not know; but it seems many voters can and do manage it. Let's just hope the new mayor of Vitrolles is even more corrupt than the socialists.

I was very sad to hear of the death of Brian Connolly of The Sweet, who was an integral part of my teenage years; I remember many a sweaty night jumping up and down to the strains of Blackbust. They did actually appear at our local nightclub in Hastings, a most unpleasant beery dive known as The Aquarius. I didn't actually make it but I do remember a girl from our school boasting that she had got into the dressing room and indulged in some very unladylike behaviour with him. Everyone seemed very impressed by this and since that day, whenever I saw or thought about Brian, I couldn't avoid picturing him in a compromising position with Sally Taylor (name changed).

So this week we finally got to see what the land mine controversy was all about with a documentary/video diary of Diana's trip to Angola. She seemed to divide her time between giggling and showing intrusive photographers away. I'm afraid I couldn't take the programme seriously. This woman is a Sloane through and through, and any amount of serious dressing-down for the occasion cannot disguise the fact that she is more at home shopping than trying to be Queen of our Hearts. Perhaps the public will fall for this and love her, while Fergie blunders her way round America cashing in and Camilla stares despairingly into the mirror. In the end though, they are all just posh rich women supporting a system of inherited wealth that is unfair and exploitative. They are therefore interchangeable and we should spend no more time attempting to assess which one is better than the other.

Barry

Barry's name, you would think, is open to interpretation. In fact, it is not. Barry is a name, and it is a name that has been used for centuries. It is a name that has been used by kings and queens, by lords and ladies, by men and women of all ranks and stations. It is a name that has been used by people of all ages and all nations. It is a name that has been used by people of all colors and all creeds. It is a name that has been used by people of all shapes and all sizes. It is a name that has been used by people of all talents and all abilities. It is a name that has been used by people of all virtues and all vices. It is a name that has been used by people of all passions and all desires. It is a name that has been used by people of all hopes and all fears. It is a name that has been used by people of all joys and all sorrows. It is a name that has been used by people of all loves and all hates. It is a name that has been used by people of all faiths and all beliefs. It is a name that has been used by people of all languages and all alphabets. It is a name that has been used by people of all times and all places. It is a name that has been used by people of all worlds and all universes. It is a name that has been used by people of all creation and all destruction. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness. It is a name that has been used by people of all strength and all weakness. It is a name that has been used by people of all power and all impotence. It is a name that has been used by people of all glory and all shame. It is a name that has been used by people of all honor and all dishonor. It is a name that has been used by people of all respect and all disrespect. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all kindness and all cruelty. It is a name that has been used by people of all generosity and all greed. It is a name that has been used by people of all humility and all pride. It is a name that has been used by people of all modesty and all vanity. It is a name that has been used by people of all simplicity and all complexity. It is a name that has been used by people of all purity and all impurity. It is a name that has been used by people of all holiness and all sinfulness. It is a name that has been used by people of all righteousness and all wickedness. It is a name that has been used by people of all justice and all injustice. It is a name that has been used by people of all mercy and all harshness. It is a name that has been used by people of all peace and all war. It is a name that has been used by people of all love and all hate. It is a name that has been used by people of all life and all death. It is a name that has been used by people of all existence and all non-existence. It is a name that has been used by people of all reality and all unreality. It is a name that has been used by people of all truth and all falsehood. It is a name that has been used by people of all good and all evil. It is a name that has been used by people of all beauty and all ugliness. It is a name that has been used by people of all wisdom and all foolishness

no idol threat

The merest crack, and horrid-looking spirits will be among us

david aaronovitch

I must get down to Canterbury. Yesterday's news that the last remains of St Thomas a Becket (slaughtered on the orders of Henry II in 1170) are to be temporarily reburied by the Vatican this year will surely boost visitors to the cathedral. There, from April to October, we will be able to gaze on a golden box containing Thomas's shirt and bits and pieces of the saint himself. Unfortunately, the word "reburied" is all too accurate in this case, since little is left of Mr a Becket other than some skull fragments and a couple of goblets of brain. Alas! His killers did their work all too well.

These are, of course, good tidings. If only England's football fans had been aware of the return before Wednesday's disappointing match with the remains-stealing Italians, they could have taunted their opponents with a chorus of "Becket's coming home, he's coming home, he's coming home..." Who knows what manner of inspiration might not have seized Matt Le Tissier when he rose to head that ball in the 32nd minute.

But wait a moment. Not everyone is delighted. The Prayer Book Society, for instance, is extremely worried about the consequences of letting the truncated Thomas return. The secretary of the society, Margot Thompson, is quoted as warning that "bringing relics back to the cathedral is going back to the theology of pre-Reformation days", ie before the break with Rome. Having blobs of Becket brain on the premises was both "unnecessary and irreverent".

The Rev David Streeter, director of the Church Society, was less absolute in his opposition - but nonetheless concerned. "Worship of relics is a well outdated medieval superstition," he argued (as opposed, I guess, to all those trendy medieval superstitions still relevant today). He went on: "I urge people to go and look at the relics as artefacts, but to make them objects of worship is ludicrous and idolatrous."

Two things interest me about this reaction. The first is the fact that a debate begun in eighth and ninth century Byzantium should exercise 20th century Britons. For more than a century, the iconoclasts

"...and Roadblock has closed all clockwise exits on the M25. Motorists are advised to close car windows this afternoon as pollution is expected to reach 'alarmingly dangerous' levels. Only upper-class passengers on the Popsi Piccadilly line will be allowed to board Heathrow trains, and buses in Islington are restricted to 'socially necessary stops'."

No one has heard this particular traffic bulletin. But if you live in or travel through any of London's 33 boroughs it is unlikely to surprise you.

The nation's capital may be swinging, but it is certainly not moving. Gridlock has become a regular blot on the landscape. Earlier this month, more than 30,000 motorists clogged west London after Hammersmith Bridge was closed at short notice for at least two years for repairs to its 110-year-old frame.

More congestion has meant more pollution. The Government's own health limits for particulates - deadly tiny particles of dust produced mainly by cars - were exceeded at least once every week last year.

Worse things are happening underground. The Tube, which millions of Londoners and commuters rely on every day, is slowly falling apart. Twice last year, the system was brought to a standstill after electrical failures, trapping tens of thousands of passengers underground for hours.

"Parts of the network are just waiting for the coffin lid to be closed. They are just life-expired and we are fighting to make sure that sudden closures do not become a regular feature. The fact is we need more money for the whole system," said one Tube manager.

The Government is unconcerned. It sounded the death knell last year for the public service after announcing in the Budget that Tube managers would lose £430m from their Treasury grant over three years.

Just to add to their troubles, ministers will announce in the next few weeks that the Underground is to be sold off - a move which has been expected ever since the Conservatives won the last general election.

Labour knows that the dilapidated network needs £350m a year simply to keep going but is too frightened to produce a spending pledge - opting instead to fudge the issue with a pledge for more "public and private" sector involvement.

While politicians posture, passengers suffer. An emergency board meeting of London Underground's directors was held earlier this week to decide which services to cut in order to keep the trains running.

Despite the gloom, however, the capital has seen a rash of new rail projects. This year

London - the city that never moves

by Randeep Ramesh

The Tube is falling to pieces, the roads are clogged and crawling, pedestrians live in fear and the air is a soup of pollution. And what is being done about it? Nothing should see a new high-speed train service, the Heathrow Express, running from Paddington to the airport. The Jubilee Line extension, a £2.6bn underground connection set to open next year, will link Stratford in east London to Westminster with a loop of track that runs south of the river with stops at Waterloo, London Bridge and a new station - planned to be the largest underground station in the world - at the site of the Millennium dome in Greenwich.

Along with the improvements on the Thameslink and the Docklands Light Railway, it is the biggest rail expansion in London since the 1930s, according to Irving Yass, director of transport and planning at London First, which represents business in the capital.

Local authorities are also trying to tackle vehicle problems. In the flagship Tory borough of Wandsworth, councillors have proposed a scheme - enforced by police - where drivers of cars that belch noxious fumes could face fines or penalty points on their licences. Tory councillors in the borough talk with the zeal of the newly converted. "We could all cut down on air pollution in the capital by limiting the number of car journeys we make," said Guy Senior, the chairman of the borough's technical services committee.

Westminster is also considering pedestrianising Parliament Square, Trafalgar Square and even Park Lane, in order to restrict the number of cars in the city centre.

Councils use meters and parking fines as major generators of revenue. Camden - where council tenants may be banned from owning cars under new proposals - made a healthy £5m surplus from its parking restrictions last year and has now said it wants an extra £1m this year.

Not everyone is happy. Measures introduced by Westminster last year made it harder to park in busy West End streets. London theatres complained that the new restrictions were damaging business.

Other cities are closely following events in London. Because rest of the country has elected bodies, many are attempting to gently restrict car use through local initiatives. In Edinburgh, councillors have asked residents to hand in their car keys and instead join a "motoring club" where homeowners rent vehicles when they need them.

But most innovative schemes in London flat through a lack of funding. The Riverbus, environmentalists agree. A recent report by green groups claimed that traffic in London could be cut by a third over the next decade by encouraging more walking and cycling as well as coaxing businesses to promote public transport and car-sharing.

The RAC agreed and published an astonishingly frank critique of the motor car when it produced its own charter to "get London moving" earlier this month. The motoring organisation advocated pedestrianising Trafalgar Square, prioritising investment in public transport and told its members: "If any future government is to aim to get people out of their cars there is simply no alternative to massive investment in buses, trains, walking and cycling."

"We champion mobility, rather than the motorist," said the RAC's chief executive, Neil Johnson.

So, if there is so much consensus, why does nothing get done? The simple answer is that there is nobody to do it. The abolition of the Greater London Council in 1986 left no single authority able to take a strategic overview of London's transport problems.

Instead there is a minister for transport in London, an advisory and planning committee (LPAC), 33 local authorities - often with competing interests - and a Cabinet sub-committee chaired by John Gummer, the self-styled minister for London.

Hence planning tends to be either shambolic, as with the Docklands - where poor transport links are only just being improved - or non-existent, which has left the Government's bus-lane program in the hands of local councillors unwilling to carry out unpopular policies.

Even former members of the Government can see the present system has its failings. "It is clear many transport issues in London have to be taken on a strategic basis and it would be clearly advantageous to be able to roll out a coherent program to tackle them," said Steven Norris, a former minister for transport in London.

Until London gets a voice, it will remain the only capital city in the Western world unable to champion a transport policy of its own. As Tony Banks, the Labour MP for Newham North West and the last chairman of the GLC, points out: "You can ask the mayors in New York, Paris or Tokyo what they have and they will say: a voice. Without one, London's case will not be heard."

Barry and the fickle finger of fame

You would know Barry Evans. Not his name, perhaps, but you would know the face - fresh, open, good-looking in a pedestrian way. Barry was famous once, a star even, at least in the domestic firmament. He began the Seventies as a television doctor (Doctor in the House and then Doctor at Large) but became a teacher in the ITV sitcom Mind Your Language.

The situation was a room full of foreigners learning English; the comedy was... a room full of foreigners learning English. The most notable foreigners in the series were Francoise Pascal and her breasts and Evans found them quite a handful. The programme was axed in 1979 (revived for a season in the mid-1980s), Evans dropped out of sight and that was pretty much the last the public knew.

But life out of the limelight went on, and a week ago, Barry Evans went to work as usual. That was the last his friends and neighbours saw of him.

On Monday, police in Leicestershire stopped three people driving Evans' car - a J-reg Montego (not very Hollywood) - and went to his house, a bungalow in the village of Claybrook Magna, Leicestershire. They found Evans' body that night, arrested the three on suspicion of murder, and ordered a post-mortem.

The actor was back in the spotlight - "Mystery of TV Doc's Murder" plastered across

The untimely death of a Seventies sitcom star this week highlights the temporary nature of celebrity, says Emma Daly

the tabloids, illustrated by that familiar, winsome grin.

"He was quiet, but everyone liked him. I remembered him from Mind Your Language and was gobsmacked when I saw him sitting in one of our cabs," Susan Middleton, who works at Crest Taxis, was quoted as saying. "At first, people knew him as Barry the actor, but over the years, he became Barry the taxi driver."

He had played that role in his last film, The Adventures of a Taxi Driver, a sub-Carry On title 'n' titters flick circa 1975, and a comedown from his movie debut, Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush, an "adolescent romp" that became a cult hit. He starred in both with Judy Geeson, with whom he is said to have had a long affair. They never married.

Despite the post-mortem, police do not yet know how Evans died. His body was found, clothed, in his sitting-room, and there were no obvious signs of a break-in. Police have released on bail the teenage girl and two men who were in the Montego and are waiting for the results of tests on Evans' body.

Locally, everyone knew about Evans' TV work, but, as neighbours said: "He was modest and never really talked about it."

Evans had not given up hope of a come-back. "What I want is a long run in EastEnders," he said last year. He had discussed the options with his agent, Malcolm Knight. "Barry was still on the books - he had decided to stay out of the business for a little while, basically because he was stereotyped. We were beginning to talk about getting his career back on track."

Starring in a Seventies sitcom is apparently the television equivalent of sailing the Bermuda Triangle.

Richard O'Sullivan was Man About the House with Paula Wilcox and Sally Thomsett, the Caroline Quentin and Lesley Ash of the Seventies. Neil Morrissey and Martin Clunes should take note - Richard was so successful that he was given his own show, Robin's Nest. But in 1994, the People reported that Richard had "spoken from a clinic of his decline to being a hard-drinking depressive".

Paula Wilcox still works, in Life After Birth on Channel 4, and in children's television, but Sally Thomsett's claim to fame has been a spread in Hello! to celebrate giving birth at the age of 46. This might not be unrelated to the fact that Wilcox played Chrissy, the sensible one, and that Thomsett played Jo, the dizzy blonde. As Tessa Wyatt, O'Sullivan's subsequent blonde, in Robin's Nest, put it: "You pay the penalty of becoming identified with a particular character so that people find it difficult to see you in any other light."

Thomsett, however, was not averse to playing the same role over and over in life, if not on screen. "The Jo image has been very useful," she said. "I've been treated as a bimbo for years - and, I must say, it's rather pleasant. I've never carried my own suitcase."

The type-casting seems to have been particularly severe in the Seventies sitcom scene, perhaps because so many of the comedies were based on such old-fashioned caricatures - all men gagging for it, all women fighting them off, all foreigners stupid or strange, all homosexuals screaming queens, all doctors male and all nurses female.

What hope was there for Ian Lavender (Private Pike) after Dad's Army, or for Melvyn Hayes (Gloria) after It Ain't Half Hot Mum? The latter appeared (in the Daily Mail) under the headline: "After six kids, maybe they won't think I'm gay."

Then there were fewer channels and fewer hours of airtime than more money to lavish on long-running home-made serials. The companies milked their comic actors for all they were worth, placing them in show after show until the public finally cracked and turned off.

And if the actor is not pulling in the punters he is out: Dennis Sellers, a talent agent who started in the business 61 years ago, said: "People do become unfashionable - it's part of the business we're in. Someone like Barry, who was very successful and then runs out of steam, is not of value. It's nothing to do with talent."

Barry Evans was no Simon Dee, fallen from grace and riches to the gutter. Evans sank gently into decline. It seems, moving to the bungalow in Claybrook Magna four years and working first for Crest Taxis before setting up on his own. His co-star, Francoise Pascal, had a bumpier ride. The parties went on but the paris dried up. She moved to the United States, discovered cocaine, beat her addiction and shopped her fellow celeb users to the News of the World.

Ms Pascal too is still on the books at Mr Knight's agency, but has had no acting work for years. "Even Celebrity Squares don't call me anymore," she told the Mail. "And I used to be queen of those game-shows."

Mr Sellers is philosophical. "TV can be a monster. While it can make people big it can also kill them," he said. And once they have sunk into obscurity, to say, they normally hit the headlines only when they die. There is the odd exception, though.

When a character in Dawn French's sitcom The Vicar of Dibley said: "There hasn't been a bus through the village since Fugbie Green died," the entertainer re-surfaced, demanding an apology from the BBC. "I would be grateful if you would inform people that I am very much alive," he said crossly.

LIGHTNING QUICK?

CLUE ( ) MELT
EVEN ( ) WISE
MINT ( ) ONTO HAND ( ) FLEE
FIST ( ) MAZE
COSY ( ) CHIN

On each line place a letter which, when substituted for the last letter of the word to the left and the first letter of the word to the right, will give two other words. The six letters used will give another word reading downwards.

What is it?

Get the answer right and we will send you a Mensa Challenge Certificate

SEND OFF NOW.

The answer is

If you can solve this puzzle you could be eligible to join Mensa, the high IQ society.

Cut the coupon for further details and a copy of the self-administered test.

Post to: Mensa, FREEPOST, Wolverhampton, WV2 2RN

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
POST CODE _____

Mensa

Chris Godsmark
Business Correspondent

There were howls of protest from cable companies on the

However Geoff Hoon, the Labour technology spokesman, said yesterday that the whole industry had changed rapidly since the original "deal" with BT. "Digital satellite television and digital terrestrial television are going to make a fundamental difference. If I was a cable company I'd be seriously nervous at the moment."

The threat from digital terrestrial television, which bypasses cable or satellite delivery methods, has already hit cable share prices heavily. Rupert Murdoch's BSkyB has linked with Granada and Carlton to bid for a licence to offer a block of digital services using the technology. BT also has links with BSKyB and one theory was that the telephones giant may have abandoned its television ambitions for fear of damaging its links with the satellite operator.

chairman and a Labour MP, said it would be wrong to characterise the move as a shift of direction.

[H]owever he said one question which would feature in the committee's conclusions was whether the ban had actually prevented BT from investing heavily in fibre-optic links. He added:

"The truth is that BT has invested quite a lot anyway. Circumstances have changed since our last report and the ban is not so much of a problem."

Nigel Code

Pearson said yesterday that no other employees at Penguin USA had been suspended. However, it repeated its intention to take the appropriate action should more details emerge.

It is also unclear if senior management at Penguin USA were aware of the accounting scheme. Peter Mayer, who retired as chairman of the division late last year, was unavailable for comment yesterday.

Very Sincerely,

၆၃ လိမ္မော်

...sectional at the top.
...is only seen on

Tom Stevenson
City Editor

Roger Carr, chief executive, pledged £40m of integration benefits by the end of next year and said achieving that level of profit enhancement would sharply reduce the apparently demanding multiple of earnings its recommended bid implied. Analysts thought that was a conservative estimate of the

The acquisition of Chubb, which still has to clear regulatory hurdles in a number of different territories, creates the world leader in fire protection and security. It puts Chubb's mainly old-Commonwealth businesses together with Williams' Yale and Kidde

The jump in Chubb's share price on Thursday by 79p, or 23 per cent to 420p, is being in-

As well as improving Williams' geographical spread, Chubb takes the group into new security and fire protection product areas. In addition to shared areas such as fire extinguishers, locks and control panels, Chubb has strong positions

A further £7m is slated for profits from additional sales as the combined companies benefit from wider distribution channels. The cost of achieving those on-going benefits will be a one-off £30m.

It is also unclear if senior management at Penguin USA were aware of the accounting scheme. Peter Mayer, who retired as chairman of the division late last year, was unavailable for comment yesterday.

Chris Godsmark

FTSE 100

Index Value
4500
4450
4400
4350
4300

Nikkei

Year	Nikkei Index (approx.)
1980	18,000
1981	19,000
1982	20,000
1983	19,500
1984	20,500
1985	21,500
1986	22,500
1987	23,500
1988	25,000
1989	24,000
1990	18,000

Magnus Grimond

Day	Price
F	6.38
S	6.39
M	6.38
T	6.37
W	6.38
T	6.38

* 10% fixed income contract

[illegible]

Investment column, page 23

CELLPHONES DIRECT TARIFF
CONNECTION CHARGE $35.25 ($30 + $5.00)
MONTHLY RENTAL $17.50 ($15 + $2.50)

PEAK RATE CALLS ON WIDE OFF PEAK CALLS
41.13¢ per min ($20 + $21) 27.63¢ per min ($10 + $17.63)

ONE SECOND BILLING
MINUTE TRUNCATION BILLING $1.77 INC. PER MIN.

ALL PHONES COME CONNECTED TO THE FREE OF CHARGE

NEW GSM MODEL 1611.
◆ Up to 3.5 hrs talk-time

CURRENCIES

**£/$

£/DM

**£/¥

Other than exchange rates and Oil Brent (Source: 1984 Index)

Pound

	Yesterday	Change	Year Ago
£ (London)	1.8221	-0.92c	1.5385
£ (Tokyo)	1.8226	+0.85c	1.6425
DM (London)	2.7367	-1.28c	2.2803
DM (London)	292.21	-70.09	164.314
¥ (Index)	97.8	-0.4	84.2

Dollar

	Yesterday	Change	Year Ago
£ (London)	0.6165	+0.35	0.6503
£ (Tokyo)	0.6160	-0.34c	0.6502
DM (London)	1.0871	+0.38c	1.4718
DM (London)	124.850	+10.815	108.111
¥ (Index)	103.9	+2.30c	86.0

OTHER INDICATORS

	Yesterday	Day's chg	Year Ago
Oil Brent $	20.52	-5.6	17.73
Gold $	342.15	+1.4	402.80

	Index	Latest Yr Ago	Next Figs
RPI	104.4	unch	150.6 T3 Mar
GDP	108.9	+2.30c	105.7

CALL FREE TODAY FOR FREE CALLS FOR LIFE

FREE 15 MINUTES OF FREE CALLS PER MONTH FOR LIFE WORTH UP TO
£74.03 inc. vat per year

FREE LEATHER CARRY CASE AND IN-CAR ADAPTOR
WORTH £55 inc. vat

FREE COUNTDOWN MEMBERSHIP FOR 1 YEAR WITH THE CELLPHONES DIRECT
ADVANTAGE CARD

FREE LIFETIME PRODUCT
WARRANTY

FREE 14-DAY MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

FREE DELIVERY IN 4 WORKING DAYS

PRICE PLEDGE: We'll match any nationally advertised offer for this phone.

TOTAL SAVINGS IN FIRST YEAR
UP £129.03
inc. vat

CELLPHONES DIRECT TARIFF
CONNECTION CHARGE £36.25 (£20 + vat),
MONTHLY RENTAL £17.63 (£13 + vat),
PEAK RATE CALLS ON WIDE OFF PEAK CALLS
43.15p per min (£29 + vat) 37.85p per min (£19 + vat)

ONE SECOND BILLING
IMMEDIATELY REDUCED BILLING £17.63 inc vat PER MONTH.
ALL PRICES EXCLUDE CONSUMERS IN THE FEE OF SUBSCRIPTION WHICH INCLUDES LOCAL NETWORK SERVICE.

NEW GSM MODEL 1611.
◆ Up to 3.5 hrs talk-time
◆ 110 hrs standby
◆ SMS send and receive ◆ Weight 250g

Cellphones
direct

THE NAME TO TRUST IN TELEPHONE SHOPPING

QUOTE REF.5242

FREEPHONE 0800 000 888
CREDIT CARD ORDERING: HOTLINE WEEKDAYS 9AM TO 9PM WEEKENDS 9AM TO 5PM

PLEASE NOTE: YOUR CREDIT CARD AND YOUR OVERSEAS/EXPORT TRAVEL
PASSPORT MUST REMAIN IN THE UK FOR 6 MONTHS AFTER TRAVEL TO AVOID CREDIT CARD CANCELLATION.
Your first call is FREE (15 mins) to the National Number 0800 000 888. In the UK you must use value added numbers to attract and retain customers or to obtain the use of national numbers in the UK. Calls between 1st and 2nd © 1999 Cellphones Direct Ltd. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without written permission.

JEREMY WARNER

That the present holders of commercial wealth and power are just going to roll over and let the new generation of entrepreneurs tickle their tummies is just not credible. They'll fight like alley cats'

More hope than reality in Internet revolution

Everyone these days seems to have an opinion about the Internet and its potential to transform the world. Like much of what's on it, however, the difficulty is separating the wheat from the chaff, the nonsense and noise from the well-informed and perceptive. One person who ought to fall into the latter category is Andrew Grove, chief executive of Intel. What he says has to be treated a bit carefully because as the world's largest producer of computer micro-chips, his commercial interest is in getting as many people wired as possible, regardless of what use or value it is to them.

Even so, he's got an interesting take on how the Internet is going to change many of our industries. Two of the most obvious examples are media and banking.

What the Internet does is provide an alternative method of distribution for media products. Because relatively few people so far are hooked up, its impact is for the time being limited. But once a critical mass is reached, which might be put at 20 to 30 per cent of households, then Dr Grove foresees almost boundless potential for bypassing traditional distributors/packages of media products.

Take our own industry - newspapers. The Internet already allows you to download most national newspapers each morning, and many foreign ones as well. Furthermore, it will eventually allow you to unbundle established products, selecting and customising your newspaper, perhaps automatically, from a series of different titles. This in itself could transform the economics of newspapers. Add in the fact that a very large proportion of classified advertising is likely to disappear onto the Internet, and newspapers as presently configured could well be in trouble.

If this is true of the media, it is equally so with banking and many other service industries. What this means in economic terms is there is likely to be a quite significant shift of wealth away from established centres of value to new and younger ones. The Internet provides a powerful tool for attacking entrenched and dominant market positions. But before we all get too carried away with Dr Grove's starry-eyed predictions it should be pointed out that there are two rather large constraints on the Internet's power to reconfigure the global economy.

The first is a simple commercial one. Joel de Rosnay, director for development at France's Cité des Sciences et de l'Industrie, reckons that by the turn of the century, some $200bn will have been invested world-wide in Internet infrastructure. But the amount of commercial revenue generated by it will still be stuck at just $5bn. What this tells us is that for the time being, the Internet is more about hope than reality - its real commercial value doesn't justify the amounts being spent on it. If they haven't already, bankers and other financiers are eventually going to cotton onto this and the very optimistic business plans on which many Internet projects are based will be challenged. This is going to put quite a break on growth.

The second constraint is a more brutal one. That the present holders of commercial wealth and power are just going to roll over and let the new generation of Internet entrepreneurs tickle their tummies is just not credible. They'll fight like alley cats to keep their traditional markets and power bases. In other words, there will be a very sizeable backlash, taking political as well as commercial forms.

So although Dr Grove is undoubtedly right about the transforming powers of the communications revolution, he may well be wrong about the timescale. Progress is unlikely to be as rapid as he and others at the cutting edge of these new technologies hope and believe.

What should we be making of the extraordinary rise and rise of the Microsoft share price, which has doubled in less than a year? In part it reflects a wider phenomenon - America's extraordinary stock market bubble. It's also got something to do with hero worship of Bill Gates. Feted and sought after where ever he goes as a genius and guru, he's now worth more than $20bn.

Trailing some distance in arrears are the real economic fundamentals of Microsoft's business and prospects.

I should be careful not to be churlish here, for these are undoubtedly excellent. There can be few businesses in the world where there are as good. Microsoft still has a virtual monopoly of PC operating system software - and monopoly has always been the touchstone of business success. It is also rolling out some promising new products. But can any of this justify the heady valuation Microsoft now commands? The probable answer is that so long as the present boom in US stock markets continues, the Microsoft share price is safe. But if it should falter, then the price looks highly vulnerable.

The two things are linked in more ways than might be thought. For quite a few of the factors that drive the American stock market boom also drive the Microsoft share price. A recent study suggested that perhaps as much as half of US economic growth is being generated by the new computer and communications technologies. While this may be an exaggeration, the point is well made. The American corporate and entrepreneurial renaissance is a technology driven phenomenon. The belief - now quite widely held in the US - that the business cycle, and therefore the stock market cycle, is a thing of the past, is fed by companies like Microsoft, demand for whose products just seems to grow exponentially.

But as everyone knows sentiment can change very rapidly. Here are some of the factors that might eventually swing it against Mr Gates. No monopoly can go on forever, and there are already signs that the Microsoft one is under threat. Ironically, one of these threats comes from the Internet, where there can be no monopoly. Networking can as easily be accomplished using so-called "dumb" terminals as through a PC, for the computer power can be supplied centrally. In other words, there may be no long term need for highly priced PCs, the lynchpin of Microsoft's market.

The other threat comes from Mr Gates himself, who is showing an increasing propensity to use Microsoft as a way of indulging his fancy. Money is being poured into artificial intelligence projects and the pursuit of artificial intelligence like there's no tomorrow. As Mr Gates himself puts it: "We are in a good position to take a very long term view and invest properly in these things". Whether this is another way of saying that Microsoft can afford to squander its money remains to be seen. Not that anyone can object, given that Microsoft has no need of funding from the capital markets and is still 24 per cent owned by its founder. Nor given his track record can anyone challenge the Gates vision of the world. But does it add up to good long term shareholder value?

Opel and Mercedes-Benz raided over 'price-fixing'

Katherine Butler
Brussels

European Commission inspectors have carried out dawn raids on the offices of the German car makers Mercedes-Benz and Opel in connection with allegations of price- and distribution-fixing, EU officials revealed yesterday.

Brussels sources warned that both companies could be stripped of their exemptions from EU rules that ban exclusive distribution arrangements if inquiries produce evidence of illegality.

The raids followed complaints from consumers who were repeatedly blocked when they tried to purchase the models they wanted in countries where they can be bought most cheaply. It is understood that complaints allege breaches of the EU's 1995 ruling on car distribution. This permits restrictive dealership and servicing agreements between manufacturers and sales outlets but only subject to strict conditions aimed at giving car buyers more opportunity to shop around to take advantage of the single European market.

EU competition Commissioner Karel van Miert renewed the car industry's longstanding "group exemption" from normal competition rules in June 1995 but insisted on giving dealers greater independence from manufacturers and specifically banned any impediments to the right of consumers to purchase a car anywhere in the Community.

News of the crackdown on Opel and Mercedes came as the Commission complained that so-called parallel trade in cars, which occurs when nationals of one EU country opt to buy a vehicle in a cheaper country, is being blocked in Belgium, Germany, Spain and the Netherlands.

Price comparisons of the EU's 75 best-selling models released by the Commission yesterday shows a gap of more than 20 per cent between the lowest and highest prices for 40 cars. On 1 November last prices varied most for Fiat, Ford, Opel, Citroën, Volkswagen, Nissan and Mitsubishi cars. And prices for some small cars varied by more than 30 per cent.

Britain has joined the ranks of the most expensive member states in which to buy a car according to the survey. The Commission says this is due to price hikes by manufacturers and the rise in sterling's value.

Fifteen of the 75 models looked at were most expensive in the UK including the Opel Corsa and Astra, the Peugeot 106 and 306, and the Renault Megane. Britain was cheapest for only three models: the BMW 730i and Volvo's 850 and 960.

Buyers will find no bargains in Germany or France which had the highest list prices in the EU. Both countries each had 30 of the dearest models. By contrast, the Netherlands and Portugal are the cheapest countries for cars.

The list price for an Opel Astra in Britain was 32.8 per cent higher than for the equivalent in Portugal. The difference is attributed to exchange rate-induced price increases.

The Commission's six-monthly car price surveys aim to highlight the opportunities for parallel trade and to pressure car makers into creating a genuine single market.

Volkswagen and its subsidiary Audi are already under investigation for alleged malpractice in relation to pricing and distribution.

Booting out impediments: Karel van Miert insisted last year on giving car manufacturers greater independence and conferring on car buyers the freedom of Europe

Last-ditch attempt to avert US air strike

Rupert Cornwell
Washington

Virtually non-stop negotiations continued yesterday to prevent the potentially devastating strike by American Airlines pilots due to start at midnight last night, that would shut down the largest US carrier and cost the country $200m (£123m) a day.

As talks here under the aegis of a Federal mediator approached the deadline, pressure was mounting on President Bill Clinton to use his emergency powers and declare a 60-day cooling-off period, during which American's operations would carry on as normal while arbitrators came up with a settlement binding on both sides.

The White House yesterday was refusing to tip its hand, as Kenneth Hipp, chief mediator, professed himself "somewhat more encouraged" by developments. But, Mr Hipp warned, "major obstacles" still remained, and management and pilots' union alike have reported next to no progress in the last few days.

The main sticking points are pay - where the company has offered a 6 per cent rise between 1997 and 2000, and the pilots are seeking 11 per cent - and the airline's plans to replace turboprops with small jets at its commuter airline subsidiary, American Eagle.

If the strike goes ahead, an estimated 40,000 travellers a day would be stranded. American, whose proposed alliance with British Airways is under regulators' scrutiny, accounts for 20 per cent of all air travel in the US. It has large hubs at Dallas, Chicago and Miami, and dominates the Caribbean market. The airline cancelled most foreign flights and some round trip domestic flights yesterday.

Weekend of wooing for Forest as rival suitors press claims

Nigel Cope

The battle for control of Nottingham Forest enters a new phase this weekend with both of the rival groups planning to meet shareholders and the club's supporters association.

The Albert Scardino-led consortium is due to meet shareholders and the supporters' association in the next few days in an attempt to enlist support for its £18m offer.

The meetings will be hosted by Sir David White, chairman of Mansfield Brewery and the Nottinghamshire Health Authority who Mr Scardino this week recruited to be chairman of the club if the bid is successful. The Scardino consortium hopes to use the meetings to persuade shareholders on the merits of its offer ahead of the crunch emergency meeting to decide the future ownership of the club on 24 February.

The Scardino consortium will meet the supporter association on Sunday. On Monday it will host an "informal dinner" for shareholders at the club.

Sir David, a shareholder in Forest as well as an enthusiastic supporter, said yesterday: "I have been impressed by the way this bid is being handled. What Nottingham Forest needs is professional management to back-up the hard work being done on the pitch."

The rival group bidding for Forest, led by Nigel Wray and local author Phil Soar, is also lobbying shareholders' support.

It too will meet the supporters on Sunday with a meeting with shareholders to follow.

The Wray-Soar consortium has criticised the Scardino offer saying that two-thirds of the cash is in return for redeemable preference shares which will be redeemed by the venture capital backers when Forest is floated. It claims this structure means that £13.6m of the investment is little more than a loan.

Footsie gallops to record high

Diane Coyle
Economics Editor

Shares on Wall Street could not sustain their latest dramatic surge yesterday. But their gain the previous day, along with a further slide in sterling's exchange rate, helped shares in London set a record.

The FTSE 100 index climbed by nearly 14 points to close at 4,341. Across the Atlantic, investors took advantage of the Dow Jones index bursting through the 7,000 barrier on Thursday to take profits yesterday, despite new figures signalling the absence of immediate inflationary pressures in the American economy. The index was 12 points lower at 7,010.89 by mid-morning. The Dow's gain of more than 1,000 points in only four months reflects investors' optimism about the strength of the US economy, although some experts remain fearful that share prices could fall sharply from their giddy heights. Just two months ago Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve, warned about the "irrational exuberance" of the financial markets.

A batch of statistics yesterday showed an unexpected fall in prices charged by manufacturers in January, along with flat industrial production and unchanged consumer confidence. The general picture was one of steady growth putting no pressure on the Federal Reserve to increase interest rates in the near future. Jonathan Basile, an economist at HSBC Markets in New York, described the figures as "Fed-friendly".

Marilyn Schajda, an economist at Donaldson, Lufkin and Jenrette, said: "The economy is slowing down from the torrid pace of the fourth quarter."

The harsh winter explained the absence of any increase in industrial output last month. Snow and storms led to a fall in hours worked in manufacturing and mining.

Energy output rose sharply, also thanks to the weather, and output of business equipment - mainly computers and trucks - built up speed. Analysts said the total production figure was likely to rebound in February. Even with the wintry slowdown, manufacturing output last month was 5.1 per cent higher than a year earlier.

Yet the continuing recovery in industry has not yet fed through into higher prices at the factory gate. Separate figures showed that these fell by 0.3 per cent last month, their first decline since October 1994.

Lower oil prices accounted for the unexpectedly good news, and should feed into producer prices for the next few months.

Separately, the University of Michigan's index of consumer sentiment was unchanged between January and February.

Market report, page 24

Between the lines of Pitman's shorthand

THE INVESTMENT COLUMN

EDITED BY TOM STEVENSON

Sir Brian Pitman's position at the top of British banking has only been enhanced by the first full year's performance of Lloyds TSB, the financial services behemoth he has created and now chairs. As well as being Britain's biggest domestic bank, the group is the UK's third-largest life insurance company and probably took a bigger share of the new mortgage market than any other lender last year.

But the headline numbers are impressive too. Since the December 1995 reverse takeover of Lloyds by TSB, profits have soared 52 per cent to £2.51bn, producing a stunning 48 per cent return on average shareholders' equity, close to double the previous year's figure. According to Sir Brian's new economic profit measure, which attempts to measure returns after deducting the risk-adjusted cost of equity, the bottom line has fattened 69 per cent to £1.06bn in 1996.

It is little wonder the bank's shares have outperformed the rest of the stock market by a quarter since the merger, rising another 1.5p to 503.5p yesterday. The raw figures do, however, need more than a little interpretation.

First off, integration has muddled the waters. Stripping out the 1995 charge of £425m for TSB and another £75m charged last year for restructuring Lloyds Abbey Life, 100 per cent-owned since last December, would trim the profits growth back to 24 per cent. Within that, probably the biggest boost came from a full-year's contribution from Cheltenham & Gloucester, the former building society for which Lloyds paid £1.7bn in 1995.

The addition of C&G, which raised its profits contribution from £67m to £336m, was a key factor in the increase from £1.27bn to £1.72bn in the core retail financial services operations. Most of the 23 per cent increase in average domestic lending to £73.5bn came from C&G and mortgages now represent around 45 per cent of the group total.

That has had the happy effect of increasing the quality of Lloyds' loan portfolio. Arrears at C&G run at around half the industry average, so the addition of its mortgage book has helped dilute the effects of Lloyds' existing problem lending.

Thus bad debt provisions tumbled from £583m to £37m last year. Lloyds is boasting that for the first time, its total outstanding provisions of £2.55bn are greater than the level of non-performing loans.

The underlying business of Lloyds is clearly of high quality and Sir Brian has made all the right strategic moves so far, eschewing investment banking and US adventures to focus almost solely on the UK market. He continues to search for another building society and possibly another insurance company.

Lloyds TSB : at a glance

But the cycle never dies and Lloyds' dependence on the UK could prove a handicap when it finally turns. That moment could be close: last year's bad debt charge of 0.4 per cent is a level not seen since 1988, just ahead of the last banking crash.

Meantime, profits this year of £2.95bn would put the shares on a forward p/e of 14. Hold.

Bounce goes out of Grosvenor

While its peers in the managed pub sector have continued their recent relentless rise, shares in the Slug & Lettuce pub chain Grosvenor Inns have had a dreadful year, falling from a high of 285p to a recent low of 165.5p. After a good bounce towards the end of last month to about 220p, half year results yesterday put the boot in once again and the shares sagged 17.5p to 206p.

The fall yesterday came despite a 25 per cent jump in pre-tax profits to £1.10m, struck from a 36 per cent rise in sales to £11.8m. Earnings per share were 17 per cent better at 5.7p and a half year dividend of 3.025p, up 10 per cent, is to be paid.

Analysts took the company to task for its failure to translate a 43 per cent rise in sales at its core Slug & Lettuce chain into a similar rise in profits. A rise of just 27 per cent reflected continuing investment in the brand and the cost of beefing up its food offering. Two new sites in Windsor and Upper St Martin's Lane in London recovered from a slow start and are now beating their budgets but if Grosvenor is really to capitalise on the brand it needs to roll Slugs out faster than it can currently manage.

That means making quicker progress in releasing funds from the half of its business which is going nowhere - some wine bars such as Hodgsons on Chancery Lane and a handful of taverns, which are really nothing more than bog-standard old fashioned pubs. In the books at around £12m in total, a sale of those assets would free up much-needed capital for the 20 Slug & Lettuce openings the company promises but arguably can't really afford just yet.

The other main worry to emerge from yesterday's figures was the early exit from the Bar Central concept whose failure was underlined by the discount to net assets represented by the £2m it achieved on disposal. Grosvenor also had to pay Inn-preneur half a million pounds to take five duff pubs off its hands. With all that baggage it is hardly surprising the market won't put the shares on a Wetherspoon or Regent Inns sort of rating.

On the basis of forecast profits of £2.4m this year, the shares trade on about 16 times prospective earnings per share. That's a discount to the rest of its fashionable sector but deservedly so. Grosvenor is doing the right things, focusing on its core brand, but until it gets out of its funding bind the shares are high enough.

IN BRIEF

- The Bank of England yesterday announced a review of the future of British Invisibles, following growing concern in recent years that the City needs a more effective body to promote the financial services industry. The review working party will be chaired by Douglas Hurd, the former foreign secretary who is now deputy chairman of National Westminster Bank.
- The Bank of England said the working party was being launched with the agreement of BI itself, the City Corporation and Scottish Financial Enterprise. It will cover promotion of inward investment, improvement of access to overseas markets and better statistics. The retirement of the chairman of BI, Sir Brian Pearce, and its director general, Alison Wright, "presents an opportunity to review the evolution of the promotion of the whole of the UK's financial services".
- Jardine Matheson Holdings has sold its half-share in the life assurance group Jardine CMG Life to its joint venture partner, Colonial, for $163m (£100m). Colonial is making the acquisition through its subsidiary CMG Asia.
- Halifax Building Society, the UK's biggest mortgage lender, is coming into line with its rivals by cutting interest rates on all its fixed-rate mortgage offerings. Two-year fixed rates now start at 6.45 per cent, down from 7.25 per cent previously, three-year fixed rates at 6.90 per cent down from 7.85 per cent, and five-year fixed rates at 7.65 per cent down from 8.45 per cent.
- Renault, the French car and truck maker, warned that its 1996 operating loss would be considerably higher than the market expected because of a difficult economic climate. The company declined to say what it considered to be the market's consensus forecast for its 1996 operating result.
- A government-backed company unexpectedly agreed to cover the entire losses suffered by Kizu Credit Co-operative, once Japan's largest credit cooperative. The Deposit Insurance Corporation said it will give ¥1,034bn (£5bn) to a special bank set up to dispose of the bad loans.
- The World Trade Organisation asked Japan to narrow the gap between taxes on domestically produced liquors and imported ones by 1 February 1998, a Japanese Finance Ministry official said.
- Inchcape has formed a joint venture with the Bank of Scotland subsidiary NWS Bank to provide car loan facilities and related services. It will be called Inchcape Financial Services.

unit trusts

THE INDEPENDENT • SATURDAY 15 FEBRUARY 1997

Foreign Exchange Rates as at 15/2/97

STERLING	Spot	1 month	3 months	DOLLAR	Spot	1 month	3 months	D-MARK	Spot
Canada	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000
US	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000
France	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000
Germany	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000
Italy	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000
Japan	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000
Spain	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000
Sweden	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000
Switzerland	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000
UK	1.5221	1.5180	1.5140	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000	1.0000

OTHER SPOT RATES as at 15/2/97

Country	Spot	Country	Spot	Country	Spot
Argentina	1.5221	Chile	1.5221	Colombia	1.5221
Australia	1.5221	Costa Rica	1.5221	Czech Republic	1.5221
Brazil	1.5221	Croatia	1.5221	Denmark	1.5221
Canada	1.5221	Cuba	1.5221	Egypt	1.5221
France	1.5221	Czechia	1.5221	Finland	1.5221
Germany	1.5221	Dominican Republic	1.5221	Greece	1.5221
Italy	1.5221	Ecuador	1.5221	Hong Kong	1.5221
Japan	1.5221	El Salvador	1.5221	India	1.5221
Spain	1.5221	Guatemala	1.5221	Indonesia	1.5221
Sweden	1.5221	Honduras	1.5221	Israel	1.5221
Switzerland	1.5221	Hungary	1.5221	Italy	1.5221
UK	1.5221	Ireland	1.5221	Japan	1.5221
		Malaysia	1.5221	Korea	1.5221
		Mexico	1.5221	Latvia	1.5221
		Nicaragua	1.5221	Lithuania	1.5221
		Paraguay	1.5221	Malta	1.5221
		Peru	1.5221	Netherlands	1.5221
		Puerto Rico	1.5221	Poland	1.5221
		Romania	1.5221	Portugal	1.5221
		Slovakia	1.5221	Russia	1.5221
		Slovenia	1.5221	South Africa	1.5221
		South Korea	1.5221	Spain	1.5221
		Taiwan	1.5221	Sweden	1.5221
		Thailand	1.5221	Switzerland	1.5221
		Turkey	1.5221	Taiwan	1.5221
		USA	1.5221	Thailand	1.5221
		UK	1.5221	Turkey	1.5221
				USA	1.5221

Tourist Rates as at 15/2/97

Country	1st Class	2nd Class	3rd Class	Country	1st Class	2nd Class	3rd Class
Argentina	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	France	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
Australia	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Germany	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
Brazil	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Italy	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
Canada	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Japan	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
France	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Spain	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
Germany	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Sweden	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
Italy	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Switzerland	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
Japan	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	UK	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
Spain	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
Sweden	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
Switzerland	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221
UK	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221

Interest Rates as at 15/2/97

Country	Rate	Country	Rate	Country	Rate
Argentina	1.5221	France	1.5221	Italy	1.5221
Australia	1.5221	Germany	1.5221	Japan	1.5221
Brazil	1.5221	India	1.5221	Spain	1.5221
Canada	1.5221	Indonesia	1.5221	Sweden	1.5221
France	1.5221	Israel	1.5221	Switzerland	1.5221
Germany	1.5221	Italy	1.5221	UK	1.5221
Italy	1.5221	Japan	1.5221
Japan	1.5221	Spain	1.5221
Spain	1.5221	Sweden	1.5221
Sweden	1.5221	Switzerland	1.5221
Switzerland	1.5221	UK	1.5221
UK	1.5221

Bond Yields as at 15/2/97

Country	Rate	Country	Rate	Country	Rate
Argentina	1.5221	France	1.5221	Italy	1.5221
Australia	1.5221	Germany	1.5221	Japan	1.5221
Brazil	1.5221	India	1.5221	Spain	1.5221
Canada	1.5221	Indonesia	1.5221	Sweden	1.5221
France	1.5221	Israel	1.5221	Switzerland	1.5221
Germany	1.5221	Italy	1.5221	UK	1.5221
Italy	1.5221	Japan	1.5221
Japan	1.5221	Spain	1.5221
Spain	1.5221	Sweden	1.5221
Sweden	1.5221	Switzerland	1.5221
Switzerland	1.5221	UK	1.5221
UK	1.5221

Money Market Rates as at 15/2/97

Country	Rate	Country	Rate	Country	Rate
Argentina	1.5221	France	1.5221	Italy	1.5221
Australia	1.5221	Germany	1.5221	Japan	1.5221
Brazil	1.5221	India	1.5221	Spain	1.5221
Canada	1.5221	Indonesia	1.5221	Sweden	1.5221
France	1.5221	Israel	1.5221	Switzerland	1.5221
Germany	1.5221	Italy	1.5221	UK	1.5221
Italy	1.5221	Japan	1.5221
Japan	1.5221	Spain	1.5221
Spain	1.5221	Sweden	1.5221
Sweden	1.5221	Switzerland	1.5221
Switzerland	1.5221	UK	1.5221
UK	1.5221

Life Financial Futures as at 15/2/97

Contract	Settlement	High/Low	Settlement	Contract	Settlement
Long Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221
Long Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221
Long Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221
Long Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221
Long Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	1.5221	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221

Life FTSE Index Option as at 15/2/97

Settlement	Price	Settlement	Price	Settlement	Price
Long Call	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221	Long Call	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221	Short Call	1.5221
Long Call	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221	Long Call	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221	Short Call	1.5221
Long Call	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221	Long Call	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221	Short Call	1.5221
Long Call	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221	Long Call	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221	Short Call	1.5221
Long Call	1.5221	Long Put	1.5221	Long Call	1.5221
Short Call	1.5221	Short Put	1.5221	Short Call	1.5221

Commodities as at 15/2/97

4400	280	45	Aluminum Alloy	2350-4000	2000-4500
2200	280	45	Copper A	600-800	1000			10000
2200	280	45	Lead	700-750	700-750			1000
2200	280	45	Nickel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Stainless Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Aluminum	1000-1200	1000			1000
2200	280	45	Steel	100

1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492, 2493, 2494, 2495, 2496, 2497, 2498, 2499, 2500, 2501, 2502, 2503, 2504, 2505, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2512, 2513, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2525, 2526, 2527, 2528, 2529, 2530, 2531, 2532, 2533, 2534, 2535, 2536, 2537, 2538, 2539, 2540, 2541, 2542, 2543, 2544, 2545, 2546, 2547, 2548, 2549, 2550, 2551, 2552, 2553, 2554, 2555, 2556, 2557, 2558, 2559, 2560, 2561, 2562, 2563, 2564, 2565, 2566, 2567, 2568, 2569, 2570, 2571, 2572, 2573, 2574, 2575, 2576, 2577, 2578, 2579, 2580, 2581, 2582, 2583, 2584, 2585, 2586, 2587, 2588, 2589, 2590, 2591, 2592, 2593, 2594, 2595, 2596, 2597, 2598, 2599, 2600, 2601, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2610, 2611, 2612, 2613, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, 2618, 2619, 2620, 2621, 2622, 2623, 2624, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, 2632, 2633, 2634, 2635, 2636, 2637, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2642, 2643, 2644, 2645, 2646, 2647, 2648, 2649, 2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 26

sport

Croft spins in to spare Atherton

Cricket

DEREK PRINGLE
reports from Christchurch
New Zealand 229-5
v England

Robert Croft is a spin bowler who defies logic, or at least the kind found in most county changing-rooms around England. He also takes wickets, which is a useful habit, especially when your captain has inserted a side on a grassy pitch in the firm belief that his pace bowlers will have put him in an unsalvageable position by tea.

With his chirp, spin and aggression, the 26-year-old Croft has been England's find of the winter, an assessment supported by the assistant bowling coach, John Emburey, who now reckons the Glamorgan player on tour is a far better version of the one he knew in England.

"He adjusts to the pace of the wicket so quickly," Emburey said. "He's a damn good bowler who's improving all the time."

Quite simply, where others failed to make a mark, Croft - as he did when England most needed it in the second Test in Wellington - stamped his now indelible authority by taking the prime wickets of Pocock, Astle and Fleming, as England clawed their way back into the game after a disconcerting morning session had threatened to expose Mike Atherton's contentious decision to field.

Asking the opposition to bat first in Tests matches is always a risky proposal. So far Atherton has done it on five occasions, winning once, drawing three times and losing the other. It is a poor win-rate considering the high-risk element involved: namely that if your opponents get a big score, you are inevitably going to have to bat on a pitch that is both worn and unpredictable.

If it was logic then it flew in the face of local advice, which, like that in Johannesburg last winter (where Atherton's decision to insert was absolved only by one of the great Test innings), regards what is above your head as more important than what is below your feet. As that was blue sky, the consensus outside the England dressing-room was to bat, despite the verdancy of the playing surface.

What undoubtedly complicated Atherton's decision, however, was New Zealand's late inclusion of Heath Davis, a seam bowler brought in to replace a veteran spinner, Dipak Patel. With the Kiwis needing to win, Atherton may have bowled simply in order to prevent the home side's pace-oriented attack from having first use of a juicy looking track. When Bob Willis tried this ploy in Adelaide during the 1982-83 Ashes series it

THIRD TEST
FIRST DAY

badly backfired when Australia won comfortably by an innings. Atherton would probably argue that bowling first has proved to be the right thing in every match so far played on this leg of the tour and that New Zealand pitches, which tend to start damp, are at their best for batting on days two and three.

It is a theory that is borne out historically and on the 35 occasions a team have been asked to bat first in Tests on New Zealand soil, losses outnumber wins 18 to seven.

Had the England captain not become so infected with the insistence of his coach, David Lloyd, on dealing solely with positives, he might also have pointed out that England again wasted the new ball, with Dominic Cork in particular looking as if he was searching for wickets through style rather than content.

The official line is that he is struggling for rhythm, which may be true. But even though he managed to pick up Bryan Young, bowled through the gate to one of the horrible shots of the series, his mind seems to be on another cloud to the long, white one over here.

Young's dismissal did give England an early chance to pressurise the debutant Matthew Horne, who, after getting off the mark with an edged four over second slip, looked as if he had both the technique and temperament to prosper at this level.

Unfortunately Horne's chance to consolidate his place will probably have to come later rather than sooner, as he suffered a fractured left wrist during his otherwise competent innings of 42. It was an injury caused by Darren Gough, the man who eventually got him out, caught by Graham Thorpe as he edged a lifter to first slip.

It was one of several injury problems endured by New Zealand, who began the day without their captain, Lee Germon, after he had failed a fitness test on an injured groin.

As the team's wicket-keeper, as well as their leader, it took two men to replace him, with Stephen Fleming taking over as acting captain and a relieved Adam Parore taking the gloves. It was a combination that deceived to flatter, and, according to many, Germon is only in the side for his PR and not his repertoire.

Fleming's promotion at the tender age of 23 over that of Blair Pocock - the only man in the side to have had first-class experience of captaincy - was a bold move. It was not so long ago that Fleming was carpeted, along with two of his teammates, for smoking cannabis during a tour to South Africa.

They say, however, that power can change a man, and after the reckless manner in which he gave up his wicket in Wellington, the tall left-hander was a model of concentration and calm.

When he is set, he can look as classy as any left-hander bar Brian Lara, and he twice left extra cover gaping in admiration as sumptuous drives off Phil Tufnell and Gough flashed by.

There are still flaws and just when it looked as if he had played his captain's role almost to perfection, a rash attempt to dominate Croft saw him efficiently stumped by Alec Stewart for 62.

It was a close decision which the umpire Daryl Hair gave out without recourse to the third umpire, an arrogant act since the technology is there to be used. Hair has done this before and, a few years ago, this unshakeable belief in his own judgement once cost England a couple of crucial run-outs in Sydney.

High flier: New Zealand's Chris Cairns evades a lifting ball by the England paceman Andy Caddick on the opening day of the third Test. Photograph: Chris Turvey/Empics

FIVE NATIONS' CHAMPIONSHIP

Welsh pride up against French form

DAVID LLEWELLYN
reports from Paris

When a French rock, Richard Dourthe, meets a Welsh hard case, Scott Gibbs, in Paris this afternoon woe betide anyone caught in the middle. The pair of them will be at the epicentre of the confrontation between France and Wales at the Parc des Princes.

Wales, with a miserable run of 10 Five Nations defeats on the trot stretching back 22 years in the French capital, and here on the rebound after perpetrating another dismal run with a home defeat against Ireland two weeks ago, do not intend rolling over and letting the Tri-colours get away with anything.

For their part France will be looking to complete the second leg of what the nation hopes will be a Grand Slam and wrap up fixtures between the two countries at the Parc before moving to a purpose-built stadium elsewhere in the capital next year.

But there's a slip twist. Five Nations cup and lip. Having lost half a dozen first-choice players through injury or suspension the last thing the French want is for Dourthe, the erstwhile bad boy - he has been variously accused of kicking England's Ben Clarke, punching Wales' Iwan Evans and spitting at Neil Jenkins as well as breaking the ribs of his closest friend, Thomas Castaignède, courtesy of a late tackle - to misbehave today.

markably, the heaviest penalty Dourthe has had imposed on him was a one-match ban for the Clarke incident. Dourthe, 22, who plays at full-back for Dax, missed the French victory over Ireland last month after suffering concussion following a training ground collision, and he was one of the six enforced changes to the side, coming in at centre for Castaignède, who is recovering from a broken jaw.

Today, promises Dourthe, he will be a good boy. "I have gone over the top several times," he admitted. "I am too impulsive. A modern player should not lose control as I have done, but I believe I have turned that corner and you will now see a different Richard Dourthe."

Not too different though. France will need his aggressive edge and fiery spirit. Wales are dangerous. Allan Bateman, like Gibbs, a prodigal from rugby league, poses a very real mid-field threat and Dourthe is aware of this. He says: "The rugby league players have transformed the approach of this Welsh side."

Dourthe, who was barely a month old when his father Claude played for France in 1975 on the occasion of Wales' last victory at Parc des Princes, must have some subliminal memory of that Gallic slip-up because he insists: "Deep down I fear the Welsh far more than I fear the English."

"In their opening match the English struck rigidly to their game plan and in my opinion did not display much of a threat. Whereas even in defeat against Ireland two weeks ago the Welsh showed a spirit that we have not seen from them in a long time."

If Wales are to storm the French line successfully they will need an exemplary performance from their pack. Against Ireland they committed the cardinal sin of losing the ball in the tackle and turning over possession to their opponents too frequently which meant they could not provide a sound platform for their backs to work on.

That performance prompted a veteran of the 1975 triumph, Charlie Faulkner, to say: "Some of the forwards are very lucky to be given another chance. You feel like putting a few back in Mothercare's window. If the attitude and application isn't totally different from that shown against Ireland then they will get a hiding. Nice guys win nothing, especially at Parc des Princes."

Talking of nice guys, Dourthe kicked 20 points when France beat Wales 40-33 in Cardiff last September. Despite that Dourthe continues to talk up the Welsh. "Apart from the ultra-hard Gibbe-Bateman pairing at centre," he explains, "they also have Iwan Evans, who remains a redoubtable finisher. Arwel Thomas, who has established himself at fly-half, not to mention a formidable back row. This Welsh side is singing a very different song from the one we faced last September. If Wales win in Paris, they will win the Five Nations' Championship."

That "if" reverberates around the concrete bowl of the Parc des Princes. Wales who were relieved to see their full-back and goal-kicker Jenkins, and Bateman come through a rigorous work-out yesterday, will have an awful lot to do.

Paris is braced for an epic encounter. History and form favour France, but pride and rekindled passion could lift Wales to greater heights.

FRANCE v WALES

at Parc des Princes, Paris		Portsmouth
J-L Sadourny	Colomiers	15 N Jenkins	Portsmouth
L Letellier	Boulogne	14 I Evans	Llanelli
R Dourthe	Dax	13 A Bateman	Richmond
S Glas	Boulogne	12 S Gibbs	Swansea
G Vannieu	Brive	11 G Thomas	Swansea
C Lamiou	Brive	10 A Thomas	Swansea
P Carbonneau	Brive	9 R Howley	Cardiff
C Califfano	Toulouse	1 C Lush	Swansea
M Dal Maso	Agen	2 J Humphreys	Cardiff
J-L Jordane	Toulouse	3 D Young	Cardiff
H Mirion	Toulouse	4 Gareth Llewellyn	Harlequins
O Merle	Montauban	5 M Rowley	Portsmouth
R Castel	Béziers	6 S Williams	Neath
F Pelous	Béziers	7 C Quirrell	Richmond
A Serraz	Agen	8 C Jarvis	Swansea

Replacements: 16 S Vire (Brive), 17 D Gough (Paris), 18 G Azzopardo (Bordeaux), 19 O Heine (Agen), 20 P Trepo (Cardiff), 21 M de Rongere (Toulon). Referee: P Marshall (Aus). Kick-off: 2.0 (BBC Wales 2.0).

Golding holds sway

Sailing

STUART ALEXANDER

Mike Golding was set to take Group 4 first across the finish line for the third time in three legs of the BT Challenge last night. With just 24 hours and 250 miles to run of the 1,250 from Wellington to Sydney he had a 10-mile advantage on Chris Tibbs in Concert.

But Tibbs was slightly better positioned to the north of Golding and determined to make up for the disappointment of being derailed on the second leg from Rio de Janeiro. Making ground was Simon Walker, third in Teshiba and heading for a top three place in all three legs as well as staying second to Golding on combined elapsed times. Nearing the finish of a complete circumnavigation is the Frenchman Christophe Augin in the 60ft Geodis. He is forecast to win the Vendée Globe single-handed non-stop round the world race at Les Sables d'Olonne tomorrow in a new record time of 105 days, four less than the previous best set by Titouan Lamazou.

Lying sixth, but due to climb higher when given time allowances for his rescue of Raphael Dinelli, is Britain's Pete Goss, safely round the Horn, recovered from performing surgery on his own elbow, and the only competitor in a 50ft yacht, Aqua Quorum.

Harris returns to Warrington

Rugby League

DAVE HADFIELD

Warrington's Great Britain stand-off, Iestyn Harris, is back in training with the club and is in line for a recall in the Challenge Cup tie against Sheffield Eagles next weekend.

Harris, the current first choice for the Test side, has been frozen out at Warrington since being transfer-listed at a world record £1.3m last season.

He has been training on his own while Warrington and prospective buyers, St Helens, have drifted further and further apart in their negotiations.

But now Warrington have told him to come back to Warrington to train with their squad and Harris has accepted the approach.

A statement from the club said: "Iestyn Harris has been instructed to report back to the club for training. This is following the failure of St Helens to put forward anything like an acceptable proposal for his transfer."

"St Helens approached the player and unsettled him at a crucial time for the club and the loss of his goal-kicking may well have cost the club fourth place in Super League."

"Iestyn is no longer available to St Helens - contact between them is prohibited - but he is still on the transfer list."

A spokesman for Harris said he had always been willing to continue to play for Warrington but still wanted a move.

Saints have confirmed that they will appeal against Bobbie Goulding's eight-match ban for his high tackle on Wigan's Neil Cowie in the Challenge Cup tie last Saturday.

"It is five years since Bobbie was last sent off and we feel the severity of the sentence outweighs the severity of the offence," David Howes, the club's chief executive, said.

Saints and Wigan have each been fined £15,000 for their televised brawl in the wake of Goulding's tackle. Half the fine has been suspended for a year in each case but the clubs, who have been told they have no right of appeal, are to seek legal advice.

Carlisle and the amateurs, Dudley Hill, who were also involved in a brawl in their tie last weekend, have each been fined £1,000, of which £750 is suspended.

Halifax have signed another young French player, the 18-year-old second-rower, Jerome Guisset, from St Estève.

First and Second Division clubs knocked out of the Challenge Cup last weekend played in the first round of the new Silk Cut Plate competition tomorrow.

Old Boys turn the corner

Hockey

BILL COLWILL
reports from Cologne

Old Loughonians, who have had bad luck recently with injuries as well as losing their National Indoor title, had a change of fortunes here yesterday when they won their opening game of the European Indoor Club Championship A Division.

They beat the Spanish champions, Aldeasa Valdeuz, 5-3 in an exciting game before a near full house. In a match in which they never looked back after opening the scoring in the sixth minute, their Scottish pair, Colin Hector and David Ralph, were outstanding and with Julian Halls showing his usual non-stop aggression, the coach, Billy McPherson, had no need to call upon himself.

The arrival of Chris Bloor, six minutes into the game, brought the first goal in a splendid move started deep in his own half by Ralph, carried on by Alan Philpot for Bloor to finish. Although the Spanish equalised shortly afterwards, a penalty stroke save by Jerry Garner gave the Old Boys confidence and they stormed back.

Chris Gladman was on hand to sweep in after Hector's penalty corner had been partially saved to put them back in the lead. When, three minutes to the interval, Ralph's stick was chopped in the circle, the Scottish international put them further ahead from the penalty spot. A defensive lapse helped the Spanish reduced the arrears to 3-2 at half-time.

Ralph was again the provider 11 minutes into the second half for Gladman's second goal and then five minutes later set up Bloor for his second.

Although Jorge Romero capitalised on another lapse of concentration for the final goal, Loughonians were, by now, home to a well deserved victory.

Cannock must do without Crutchley

PETER COLWILL

Bobby Crutchley will be missing from the Cannock line-up when they visit his old club, Hounslow tomorrow, as the Premier leaders will be looking to reassert themselves after their defeat at home to Canterbury last week. Crutchley broke a thumb in that game but expects to be fit for England's trip to Pakistan next month. His temporary absence is hardly likely to deny him the prize of a Forte Posthouse weekend for two as the League's leading scorer. He is currently nine goals ahead of East Grinstead's Richard Gibson.

Cannock may have lost the No 1 spot for the first time since November by the time they meet Hounslow. Teddington entertain immediately before them, and victory would put them ahead, if only temporarily.

Luke Hodges comes into the Teddington squad for Jason Laslett, who is on holiday. Teddington will hope to extend their run of wins to nine. Guildford are likely to be without Brett Garrard, their influential England Under-21 captain.

Women face hard schedule on final day

Skiing

The last day of the Alpine World Championships in Sestriere tomorrow will be crowded with three medal races and some of the women having to compete twice within few hours.

Organisers said the women's combined downhill, which was called off on Thursday and yesterday due to bad weather, would be held today at noon.

Before that, the regular women's downhill will be held at 9.30am. The men's slalom, at 5pm and 8pm, will then be the final event.

The rescheduling is likely to affect the German women skiers Katja Seizinger and Hilde Gerg most of all. Seizinger is the 1994 Olympic downhill champion and a front-runner for the world title. She is also well placed with Gerg for the combined title.

It is not the first time this season that the women have had two speed races in a day. On 7 December in Val, they held a World Cup super-giant slalom and hours later the downhill.

Rugby's future

A seminar on the state of the game

THE QUEEN ELIZABETH II CONFERENCE CENTRE

Friday, February 28, 1997

Independent Magazines (UK) Ltd.

7-9 Rathbone Street,
London, W1P 1AF

sponsored by

Rugby
NEWS

for an application form:

Tel: 0171 636 6651 or

Fax: 0171 580 7209

in association with

THE INDEPENDENT & SBC Warburg

sport

Bradford City's manager has buried his hard-man image and built his First Division side's passing game around Chris Waddle's subtle skills. Phil Shaw met him as he prepared his players to face Sheffield Wednesday tomorrow

Kamara's secret depths

During two decades as a mid-field enforcer, the intensity of Chris Kamara's tackling came to be feared by those who carried the flame for football's finer arts. In his first full season as manager of Bradford City, he is confronting people's preconceptions with similar zeal.

Ten years ago this month, the man now striving to make Bradford a bastion of the beautiful game became the first player ever to face police proceedings for an on-field incident. Kamara received a four-figure fine for breaking an opponent's jaw, and, by his own admission, had run up "a terrible list of bookings and five or six sendings-off" before retiring.

By an unhappy coincidence, the Bradford board recently started legal action against a Huddersfield player. Gordon Watson, making only his third appearance after Kamara bought him from Southampton for a club-record £550,000, had a leg broken in two places in a challenge by Kevin Gray.

Although Kamara was so incensed by the incident that he had to be restrained by his players, he sees no contradiction or hypocrisy in his apparent change from poacher to gamekeeper. There was certainly no macho posturing about the altercation that put him in the dock in his Swindon days. He paid a heavy price, both financially and in terms of his reputation, but that was then and this is now.

If he had built Bradford in his own image as a player, tomorrow's sell-out home tie against Sheffield Wednesday in the FA Cup's fifth round would have been the definitive clash of styles. Instead, it promises to be a purist's delight, with Chris Waddle among those upholding Kamara's improbable principles against David Platt's side.

The match has added intrigue because Platt, whose teams are the antithesis of route-one or rough-house football, deemed Waddle surplus to requirements. Last autumn, First Division Bradford took him in at Valley Parade. He remains there after spurning the post of player-manager at West Bromwich, his renaissance providing a stylish symbol of Kamara's conversion.

At least it looks like a U-turn to the outsider. Kamara, whose gentle eloquence and wry humour further belie his image, argues that it is football which has changed, not him. "I've always thought it was a beautiful game and that the ball should be passed around," he says. "I also believe you can create goalmouth excitement without resorting to the long-ball game."

It is as if Kamara has rekindled an adolescent passion. While some regard it as gaucheness, he was not displeased when one newspaper described him as "39 going on 13".

Chris Kamara in his pitch-side office at Valley Parade: 'I spent the best part of 20 years trying to stop people like Chris Waddle from playing'

Photograph: Peter Jay

Yet he offers another, pragmatic, reason for eschewing the cynical methods of his past. "Some of the things I did on the pitch, you couldn't do today because of the rule changes covering things like the tackle from behind," he says, the honesty as brutal as a whack on the shin. "Nowadays you need people who are skilful rather than physical in the English game."

"I spent the best part of 20 years trying to stop people like Chris Waddle from playing. Now I'm convinced that good touch and loads of movement are the way forward."

Bradford's squad reflects his faith in flair (as well as a judicious exploitation of the Bosman ruling while funds went into ground improvements). It includes a Dutchman, two Portuguese (one of Brazilian origin), sundry Scandinavians and the pass master who once kept Paul Gascoigne out of the England team, Gordon Cowans. Kamara makes no secret either of his interest in reuniting Waddle with Peter Beardsley in City's daret and amber.

It appears to be a classic case of "do as I say, not as I did". But while the former dockyard apprentice from Ipswich was a ball-winner, with all that term implied, he always felt there was a more constructive player trying to get out.

The catalyst proved to be a transfer from Stoke to Leeds in 1990. The bookies dried up, the skill began to show. At 32, Kamara made his debut at the top level as an emergency left-back, subbing Tony Daley without recourse to ruggedness. He went on to enjoy a trouble-free run, never playing the sore thumb among sophisticates like Gordon Strachan and Gary McAllister.

"My only regret is that I didn't play for Howard Wilkinson earlier. I would have achieved more and played even longer if I had. At other clubs I was with, the players were always anxious about money, about making ends meet. So to go somewhere as well organised as Leeds, where almost the only thing you had to worry about was playing on a Saturday, was fantastic."

"Howard was my dream manager, somebody I'd been crying out to play for. He encouraged me to cut out the reckless challenges - fined me for them - and it worked well for me. He's so meticulous. If anyone was made to be a technical director, it's him."

From Lou Macari, at Swindon, he learned that managers do not have to court popularity to earn respect. At Sheffield United, Dave Bassett was strong on squad spirit. Serving under Lennie Lawrence at Middlesbrough and Bradford was equally instructive. "He's got a great knowledge of football but is also incredibly laid-back, which I envy," Kamara says.

Then there was the shrewd strategist who bars Bradford's path to the quarter-finals. "David Platt probably did more for me [at Luton] than anyone apart from Howard. He only had to see a player once to work out all their strengths and weaknesses."

Kamara is grateful, none the less, that Platt saw fit to free Waddle. "Chris should still be playing top-quality football week in, week out. The bigger the stage, the better he is, as he proved in the fourth round at Everton. But he's also been superb at places like Wycombe and Grimsby."

Waddle, a cult figure with supporters, is obviously enjoying his football again. And as if to prove that Kamara is not the only one breaking new ground, the man Middlesbrough's followers christened "the king of swaying hips" even scored. Win-bledon-style, with a far-post header against Huddersfield. At Goodison Park, he embarrassed Neville Southall with a majestic chip from 35 yards.

One theory as to why the bigger clubs ignored Waddle is that they doubted his capacity, in his 37th year, to sustain his impact on a game. It may also be that some managers were afraid to bring in a charismatic figure who might have ended up replacing them.

What if 21st-placed Bradford end up being relegated - surely Waddle's presence offers an instant solution for the chairman? "Of course it could happen, but I can't worry about that," Kamara says. "I have to do what's best for the club."

"But I believe in my ability. I promised my chairman, Geoffrey Richmond, promotion last season when I took over, which we achieved despite starting from mid-table. You must stick by your beliefs. To me, signing someone of Chris's class is never a gamble."

"Results weren't good before Christmas, but I can assure you we won't be in the bottom three at the end of the season. We've been playing the best football this city's ever seen - all that was missing was the firepower, which is why the chairman put up the money for Watson."

Lofty claims. To substantiate them Kamara points to a near doubling of attendances since last season, easily the biggest rise in all four divisions. As proof of their Premiership potential, he cites last May's invasion of Wembley by 30,000 Bradfordians for the play-off final victory over Notts County.

Ending the season in triumph made a welcome change, Kamara explained. As a player with Luton, Middlesbrough and Sheffield United, he was relegated from the top section three years running. "They say that Coventry used to pay clubs to sign me," he says with deadpan delivery.

Mention of Luton's demise reminds Kamara of his return to Elland Road in their colours. Eric Cantona had just scored his first goal for Leeds and the man from Yorkshire TV pressed Lee Chapman, who once played in France and had offered to act as an interpreter, to ask him about it.

"So Chappy turned to Eric and said [slips into Inspector Clouseau accent]: 'Ow duz eet feel to ev scored your first goal?' Not surprisingly, Eric was speechless."

Much as Chris Kamara would love to leave his own manager that day, David Platt, lost for words, Bradford will not set out to beat Wednesday at any cost. "Football's about winning and I'm a winner, but you also have to set standards and entertain people," he says, a man of conviction in more senses than one.

TEAM NEWS. MAJOR WEEKEND FOOTBALL FIXTURES AND POOLS CHECK

FA CUP

FOURTH ROUND

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn will again be without long-term absentees Pearce, Fenton, Ripley and Coleman. Ukrainian international defender Yevushok, an £800,000 signing from Dnipro Dnipropetrovsk, may be called up for his Coventry debut as Breen is cup-tied.

FIFTH ROUND

Birmingham v Wrexham

Birmingham could be without nine players, with former FA Cup winners Bruce, Albion (both hamstringing) and Lampard (knee) all doubtful, while Devlin has a back problem. Definitely out are knee-injury victims Francis and Tait, the suspended Gillingham, Barnett, who has glandular fever, and the cup-tied pair Forster and O'Connor. Newell has been recalled from his loan spell with West Ham. Humes, Ward and Brace all face late fitness tests for Wrexham, so Skinner and teenage striker Morris are added to the squad.

Chesterfield v N Forest

Chesterfield captain Dyche will undergo a late fitness test on a hamstring strain. Holland is struggling with a groin injury, while Davies, who scored a hat-trick in the last round, is trying to shake off a bout of tonsillitis. Williams is definitely out through suspension. Forest player-manager Pearce is banned, so Gerrard is likely to return with Phillips moving to left-back.

Leeds v Portsmouth

Bowler (ankle) faces a late fitness test for Leeds. Portsmouth's Swedish striker Svensson also has a test on an arm injury. Whitbread is available following a knee injury.

Man City v Middlesbrough

For City, Brighowell, Beagins and McGoldrick are all fit. Middlesbrough will be without the suspended Emerson, while Moore has a test on an ankle in-

TODAY

3.0 unless stated

FA Cup fourth round

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Nationwide League

First Division

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

GM Vauxhall Conference

First Division

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Blackburn v Coventry

Pies or players – that's the stark choice Scotland face if they want to produce the likes of Dalglish, Cooper or Law again

Waiting for my daughter's birth is like waiting for a Scotland goal – eagerly anticipated, but anybody's guess when it's going to happen. And she might one day have to choose if she wants to pledge her future to Scotland or England since she has a Scottish dad and English mum.

It's unlikely ever to become an issue. However, this matter of nationality does seem to be growing increasingly blurred around the edges. One wonders, for example, for Andy Caddick feels as he bowls for England in his former home town of Cheshire; whether Matt Le Tissier wishes he'd chosen to personally Gallic flair rather than English graft; whether one-time England schoolboy Ryan Giggs, who pulled out of yet another Welsh friendly this week, regrets choosing the Welsh dragon above the English lion;

whether Mark Crossley, erstwhile pretender to Scotland's goalkeeping jersey who made his debut for Wales this week, is suffering an identity crisis; and whether Neil Sullivan, that surf London geezer who was called up by Craig Brown in Estonia, really feels as Scottish as he says he does?

Sullivan's case is the most disturbing. The Wimbledon keeper may not be (as he's admitted) "a proper haggis-eating, kilt-wearing Bonnie Prince Charlie" but no matter, this is after all the caring 90s when we can even accept dear old Vinnie playing for Wales, so it'd be wrong to deny Sullivan his chance.

The worrying thing is that Scotland seem to be following the lead of the Irish and the Welsh in searching for players with tenuous links to the motherland or, in this case, the grandmother land.

It was significant that in the week Sullivan got the nod, Bolton pulled out of a deal with Aberdeen for Scott Booth. A few years ago Booth and Eoin Jess were considered Scotland's brightest young stars. Jess has hardly set the heather alight since he came south to Coventry, and now Booth finds himself rejected by a First Division club.

It was also significant that last Saturday Gordon Durie became the first Scot to score for Rangers this year. It was only five years ago that Leeds were beaten in the European Cup by a Rangers side with a backbone of Scots.

Yet European players now form the nucleus of both Rangers and Celtic. Where once they would have bought Scottish, they now look to Europe, while the best that Scotland has to offer – players such as Paul Lam-

Olivia Blair

ON SATURDAY

bert and Allan Johnston – move abroad.

Compared to the 70s and early 80s, few venture over Hadrian's Wall. Then, the top sides seemed to be brimming with influential Jocks: Law, Strachan, Buchan and Macari at Manchester United; Lorimer, Jordan and the Grays at Leeds and Dalglish, Hansen, Soumess, and Nicol at Liverpool.

Currently I can think of only four Scottish players who play a pivotal role in their English sides: Hendry (Blackburn), McAllister (Coventry), Ferguson (Everton) and McGinlay (Bolton). Scotland is not widely considered to be the healthiest breeding grounds for the footballers of the future, although some English clubs still have a strong scouting presence there, notably Coventry and Manchester United. Even the late David Cooper once admitted: "If I was 18 again, I wouldn't stay here. Strength has replaced skill as the most important credential. If you can put your foot on the ball and slow the game down, you stick out a mile."

If that's the case, when will we see the likes of Dalglish, Jordan, Cooper and Law again? According to Craig Brown, Scotland's manager, it will be "a very long time before we get another Dalglish".

Brown refuses to blame the dearth of such players on the structure of the Scottish Premier Division in which clubs play each other at least four times a season so that a player's technique is all but sussed out before he has a chance to mature. He says Scotland's current plight "has more to do with evolution, an accident of birth" and stresses that the Scottish Football Association are committed to developing excellence, with plans afoot to set up a residential centre for the best young players.

Brown's predecessor, Andy Roxburgh, claimed the problem with the development of young talent in Scotland is that "we still approach football the way we did 100 years ago. For example – blues parks. The west of Scotland is the only place I've ever seen them. Whoever dreamed up crushed red shale as a suitable football surface certainly never asked anyone in the game".

Perhaps the problem is an even more parochial one than that, as David Murray once observed. "A few of us want to discuss super leagues," said the Rangers chairman, "but all the rest can talk about is the price of meat pies." Set against the general comment made by Aberdeen's general manager, David Johnston, that "pies are probably the most sacrosanct thing in Scottish football", that's hardly surprising. But it would be nice to think the Scots felt the same way about their players as they do their pies.

Big chance for the small clubs

Guy Hodgson on this weekend's round in the most open FA Cup for years

Ah, the heavy beat of anticipation on FA Cup fifth round day. Every club counts three matches and a frisson of excitement runs through them. More so this year than for a long time.

The twin towers which began as a desirable but hazy vision in January have become a more defined objective for the surviving clubs this year thanks to the absence of the usual suspects when it comes to making off with the trophy in May.

Arsenal, Everton, Liverpool, Manchester United and Tottenham have won the Cup every year bar two since 1981 and with their removal the temptation to think about tailors checking for the fitting of Wembley suits becomes irresistible. It has been the year of the upset. We are seeing the stirring of the have-nots and never-hads.

Even Manchester City, whose wretched season of chopping and changing managers suddenly has taken an alternative complexion. They meet the Premiership's bottom club Middlesbrough in the fifth round today to the accompaniment of warnings from the police saying they will clamp down on ticket touts. Old hat at Old Trafford, of course, but at Maine Road?

There will be 31,000 to watch the First Division team that lost matches almost as frequently as they discarded name plates on the boss's door until Frank Clark's appointment in December arrested the decline so much so and they go into today's match with a seven-game unbeaten run.

Expectation, fanned by United's defeat at Wimbledon, is rampant in the sky blue side of Manchester which has had Clark dashing for a huge dose of reality. "There's an opportunity because the bigger clubs are out," he said, "but unless we win today the opportunity will have gone. Clubs like Middlesbrough will also have noticed who's left in the competition."

The match of aspiring giants in stricken circumstances would be fascinating anyway but the contest will pit arguably the best two dribblers in Britain. The twinkling feet of Georgi Kinkladze and Juninho seem to be inspired by the prospect of playing at Wembley.

Certainly it has lit Kinkladze's touchpaper and yesterday he was talking about going to the old ground three times this year. "I believe I have chances in the FA Cup, the pro-

Georgi Kinkladze (left) and Juninho, who are crucial to their club's Cup hopes motion play-offs and in the international between Georgia and England in April. I think promotion is possible if City can keep on playing as they have."

A severe dose of Cup fever has been diagnosed.

City are one of seven Nationwide clubs hoping to make it to the last eight, including Portsmouth who travel to Leeds with five consecutive wins behind them and Queen's Park Rangers, who will try to halt the Wimbledon charge in all three domestic trophies. Indeed there is only one all-Premiership tie today and even that is a throwback to the fourth round, Blackburn versus Coventry, for the right to meet Derby.

The lowest placed of the lot are Chesterfield and Wrexham who fly the flag for the Second Division after removing such notables as Bolton and West Ham respectively.

Chesterfield, in the fifth round for the first time in 47 years, play host to Nottingham Forest with injury worries about their skipper, Sean Dyche (who used to play for Forest), and the scorer of a hat-trick at Burnley Park, Kevin Davies. There are fitness problems for Wrexham's match at Birmingham, but it is the home side who are afflicted with nine players doubtful including their captain, Steve Bruce.

If they have worries, however, they are mild compared to Leicester City's. They meet Chelsea tomorrow with Mustafa Izzet, Neil Lennon, Emile Heskey and Matt Elliott suspended, three players definitely out injured and another four doubtful. Chelsea, meanwhile, can afford the luxury of keeping the frustrated Gianluca Vialli on the bench.

Arguably the tie of the round also takes place tomorrow when Bradford City, complete with 36-year-old Chris Waddle, play host to Sheffield Wednesday, who released the former England winger last summer.

Waddle scored a goal to eclipse even David Beckham's effort against Wimbledon with an exquisite lob against Everton in the last round and the overall quality of his performance that day will ensure he will be man-marked, probably by Peter Atherton.

"I don't care what they do," he said. "If you're marked you might not get as much of the ball but you drag people away and it's up to your team-mates to use the space you leave. Let them worry about us. We're fourth from bottom of the First Division while they're in the Premiership's top 10, so we've nothing to lose."

In the year of the upset, more than the Wednesday players will be concerned this morning. With the path to Wembley less congested with heavyweights than normal they may never get a better chance again.

Liverpool link up with Crewe

Liverpool were at pains yesterday to deny that the "alliance" they have formed with Crewe Alexandra was just another word for the formation of the first nursery club in the English game.

Officially, the liaison with the Second Division club is designed to enhance the development of young players and is not linked to recent proposals that lower level sides should become feeder clubs for Premiership big fish.

The alliance was announced 24 hours after Liverpool took Crewe's 23-year-old midfielder Gareth Whalley on trial with a view to a permanent move.

Liverpool will have no shareholding or financial stake in Crewe who are to maintain their autonomy.

A statement issued by Liverpool said: "The alliance was perceived to offer mutual benefits despite the differences in stature, size and likely future development of the two parties."

"Although smaller in all respects, Crewe Alexandra mirrors Liverpool in many ways, with its commitment to professional excellence, an established record in the development of new talent and the acknowledged quality of its coaching systems."

"The clubs see a number of benefits from improved contacts, including increased commercial opportunities for both parties and closer liaison between the training and coaching staffs of both clubs with regard to the development of young players."

Ronnie Whelan has been reinstated as Southend United's manager four days after he was suspended by the club and 24 hours after being charged by the Football Association with misconduct.

"We have now had the opportunity of studying the referee's report, looking at the video of the game and discussing the matter with Ronnie," John Adams, Southend's chief executive, said.

Whelan and his assistant, Theo Foley, were involved in a touchline incident with a linesman during last Saturday's match at Manchester City. Both were sent off and Foley was sacked on Monday.

has conceded 73 goals, but Bone insists there is little point in him or his players worrying about Brian Laudrup and the other Ibrox stars. "If I thought about the likes of Laudrup, I would have been sleepless for three weeks since the draw," Bone said. "If those guys play to their form, then it could be a long afternoon for us, but we will do our best."

Rangers will be without Paul Gascoigne, whose ankle injury will keep him out for at least another week, and their Chilean striker, Sebastian Rozental.

Alan Sugar

On 20th January 1994 we published an article concerning the delay at that time in the appointment of Terry Venables as England coach. This report may have been understood to suggest that Alan Sugar had sought to cause the delay. Alan Sugar wishes to make it clear that he always believed Terry Venables was the best man for the England job and at no time did he seek to hinder Venables' appointment by threats of legal action or otherwise.

has conceded 73 goals, but Bone insists there is little point in him or his players worrying about Brian Laudrup and the other Ibrox stars. "If I thought about the likes of Laudrup, I would have been sleepless for three weeks since the draw," Bone said. "If those guys play to their form, then it could be a long afternoon for us, but we will do our best."

Rangers will be without Paul Gascoigne, whose ankle injury will keep him out for at least another week, and their Chilean striker, Sebastian Rozental.

Alan Sugar

On 20th January 1994 we published an article concerning the delay at that time in the appointment of Terry Venables as England coach. This report may have been understood to suggest that Alan Sugar had sought to cause the delay. Alan Sugar wishes to make it clear that he always believed Terry Venables was the best man for the England job and at no time did he seek to hinder Venables' appointment by threats of legal action or otherwise.

has conceded 73 goals, but Bone insists there is little point in him or his players worrying about Brian Laudrup and the other Ibrox stars. "If I thought about the likes of Laudrup, I would have been sleepless for three weeks since the draw," Bone said. "If those guys play to their form, then it could be a long afternoon for us, but we will do our best."

Rangers will be without Paul Gascoigne, whose ankle injury will keep him out for at least another week, and their Chilean striker, Sebastian Rozental.

Alan Sugar

On 20th January 1994 we published an article concerning the delay at that time in the appointment of Terry Venables as England coach. This report may have been understood to suggest that Alan Sugar had sought to cause the delay. Alan Sugar wishes to make it clear that he always believed Terry Venables was the best man for the England job and at no time did he seek to hinder Venables' appointment by threats of legal action or otherwise.

Adams doubtful as Arsenal look to regain lead

NICK HARRIS

Arsenal go into today's north London derby at Tottenham knowing they can go top of the Premiership for the first time since mid-December if they win by two clear goals.

Roy Adams, kept out of England's World Cup qualifier with Italy on Wednesday by injury, has a 20 per cent chance of playing, according to Arsène Wenger, the Arsenal manager. The defender faces a late fitness test, as the twisted ankle sustained in Arsenal's 1-0 FA Cup defeat by Leeds 11 days ago. Goalkeeper David Seaman, who also missed the game at Wembley, is definitely out.

Tottenham, who lost 3-1 at Highbury in November and have won just three of 12 games since, also have injury problems.

"Any good squad can absorb one or two injuries, but not nine as we had at one point recently," Gerry Francis, the Tottenham manager, said. "To be honest, I would rather Arsenal were still in the FA Cup and we wouldn't have to play them until the end of the season."

In the Nationwide League First Division, Bolton Wanderers hope to extend their nine-point advantage at the top of the table when they meet fourth-placed Sheffield United. Bolton are likely to be without their Danish midfielder Per Frandsen, injured in last week's 3-1 defeat at Reading, and United are without their goalkeeper Alan Kelly, who has a back injury.

Colin Todd, the Bolton manager, is keen to increase his team's lead, saying yesterday: "This is a vital stage of the season for us."

Also at the top of the table, second-placed Wolverhampton Wanderers meet Crystal Palace, who are sixth. Wolves are expected to field an unchanged line-up as they look for a fifth consecutive League win, while Palace are without Ray Houghton and goalkeeper Chris Day through injury.

Third-placed Barnsley, expected to be at full-strength, visit Charlton, who won their first match of the year last week but are without Richard Rufus, Mark Kinsella and Brendan O'Connell, all through suspension.

The pick of the Third Division is the meeting of Fulham and Wigan. Second-placed Fulham are looking to recover from a 2-0 defeat at Lincoln last week, while the leaders, Wigan, ahead on goal difference and with a game in hand, will be confident after beating Carlisle last weekend.

Scottish football

RUPERT METCALF

East Fife have become used to being on the wrong end of thrashings this season – and little is likely to change today. Sixteen points adrift at the bottom of the Bell's Scottish League First Division, the hapless men from Methil are off to Ibrox for a daunting Tannents Scottish Cup fourth-round tie.

Jimmy Bone, the East Fife manager, said: "The majority of my players are part-timers and combine their football with work commitments. But they are hungry to progress and we know we have nothing to lose on Saturday."

East Fife know that the only thing they are likely to be taking home from Glasgow to the Fife coast is a six-figure cheque, which will help them fund their move to a new stadium.

East Fife have won just one of their 26 league games – the worst record in British football. Their goalkeeper Lindsay Hamilton, once on the books at Rangers under Graeme Souness, has conceded 73 goals, but Bone insists there is little point in him or his players worrying about Brian Laudrup and the other Ibrox stars. "If I thought about the likes of Laudrup, I would have been sleepless for three weeks since the draw," Bone said. "If those guys play to their form, then it could be a long afternoon for us, but we will do our best."

Rangers will be without Paul Gascoigne, whose ankle injury will keep him out for at least another week, and their Chilean striker, Sebastian Rozental.

Alan Sugar

On 20th January 1994 we published an article concerning the delay at that time in the appointment of Terry Venables as England coach. This report may have been understood to suggest that Alan Sugar had sought to cause the delay. Alan Sugar wishes to make it clear that he always believed Terry Venables was the best man for the England job and at no time did he seek to hinder Venables' appointment by threats of legal action or otherwise.

has conceded 73 goals, but Bone insists there is little point in him or his players worrying about Brian Laudrup and the other Ibrox stars. "If I thought about the likes of Laudrup, I would have been sleepless for three weeks since the draw," Bone said. "If those guys play to their form, then it could be a long afternoon for us, but we will do our best."

Rangers will be without Paul Gascoigne, whose ankle injury will keep him out for at least another week, and their Chilean striker, Sebastian Rozental.

Alan Sugar

On 20th January 1994 we published an article concerning the delay at that time in the appointment of Terry Venables as England coach. This report may have been understood to suggest that Alan Sugar had sought to cause the delay. Alan Sugar wishes to make it clear that he always believed Terry Venables was the best man for the England job and at no time did he seek to hinder Venables' appointment by threats of legal action or otherwise.

has conceded 73 goals, but Bone insists there is little point in him or his players worrying about Brian Laudrup and the other Ibrox stars. "If I thought about the likes of Laudrup, I would have been sleepless for three weeks since the draw," Bone said. "If those guys play to their form, then it could be a long afternoon for us, but we will do our best."

Rangers will be without Paul Gascoigne, whose ankle injury will keep him out for at least another week, and their Chilean striker, Sebastian Rozental.

Australian takeover

GOLF

The greens are very hard to read and you must drive the ball in the fairway. It is an absolute must," said Woods, whose sound was shattered by bogeys on the last two holes that left him sharing ninth place.

Jose Maria Olazabal has still to decide whether he will make his comeback at the Dubai Desert Classic in two weeks' time but he has asked his manager to arrange a visa for him.

He has not played a tournament since September 1995 because of rheumatoid arthritis in both feet, but after treatment from a German sports medicine expert, he has been exercising and practising regularly.

James steps up a gear practising for about five or six hours a week right now and I badly need a lot of matches under my belt to get back into the swing of things.

"It's all about concentration with me and today that was pretty good," added James, who highlighted a solid performance with breaks of 46, 55, 43 and 47.

James is the only player to have beaten Stephen Hendry at The Crucible in the 1990s, defeating him 13-11 in the World Championship six years ago.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) – The Yankees' season began with a bang as they defeated the Boston Red Sox 10-1 in the first game of the season.

Hard man gone soft

Chris Kamara puts skill before brawn, page 30

sport

Happy hooker

Mark Regan takes on Ireland, page 29

FIVE NATIONS' CHAMPIONSHIP

Rodber must take control
for EnglandCHRIS HEWITT
reports from Dublin

The kitchen-sink theory of rugby pays dividends only when key opponents start washing their hands of all responsibility. If Jack Rowell, the England coach, has spent the last five days warning his players what to expect when they square up to an increasingly positive Irish side in Dublin this afternoon, it is a safe bet that he has concentrated most of his attention on two players who already know the score.

If ever there was a time for Jason Leonard, the Harlequins prop, and Tim Rodber, the Northampton No 8, to stand up and be counted amid the flying crockery, this is it. Together with Martin Johnson, their equally influential comrade in the second row, they have first-hand experience of the Emerald Isle furies and given the fact that Lansdowne Road is virgin territory for two-thirds of today's England line-up, that makes them central to Rowell's strategy.

Leonard's role has been a matter of public debate all week. Rowell asked his pack leader to address the squad when it convened on Tuesday: in much the same way as Will Carling gave a special insight on the psychology of playing the Scots a fortnight back, the long-serving Quins player's conclusive front-row performance in Dublin two years ago gave him added authority in the build-up to the latest Five Nations encounter. Certainly, his individual contest with Nick Popplewell, who means something very similar to the Irish in terms of expertise and know-how, will be of considerable significance.

Yet it is Rodber who needs to deliver the biggest game of all. His most illustrious predecessor in the middle of the England back row, Dean Richards, was largely responsible for the two victories in Ireland this decade – the last 20 minutes he turned in at Lansdowne Road during the Grand Slam campaign of 1991 has a secure place in the annals – and it has not escaped anyone's notice that Rodber's direct rival this afternoon is the man Leicester supporters have christened the "new Deano".

Eric Miller, just 21 but armed with the cool brain and the close-quarter nous of the most battle-hardened veteran, is on such a hot streak that his opponents tend to finish games with first-degree burns. Rather like Richards, he has an uncanny ability to control the dynamics of the most torrid forward exchanges. Unlike Richards, he also possesses a

Five Nations table

	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
England	1	1	0	0	41	13	2
France	1	1	0	0	32	15	2
Wales	2	1	0	1	59	45	2
Ireland	2	1	0	1	41	57	2
Scotland	2	0	0	2	32	75	0

Remaining fixtures

Today: Ireland v England (Lansdowne Road); France v Wales (Parc des Princes).
1 March: England v France (Twickenham); Scotland v Ireland (Murrayfield).
15 March: Wales v England (Cardiff Arms Park); France v Scotland (Parc des Princes).

wide game; as Les Cusworth, England's assistant coach and a Leicester man from head to toe, said yesterday: "He really is one hell of a talent."

A serious test for Rodber, then, made all the more difficult by the morale-sapping criticism he has been forced to endure this week. Both Richards and Peter Winterbottom, outstanding England loose forwards of the immediate past, have questioned the wisdom of picking the Northampton captain ahead of Ben Clarke in a revamped back row and since neither man could be fairly described as a rent-a-quote merchant, the barbs will have found their mark.

At least Rowell, who watched Rodber produce the goods here two years ago when, as England's blind-side flanker, he took the fight to the Irish with muscular effect, is in no doubt that he has the right man. "Tim gives us control at the back of the scrum, he is strong enough in possession to allow others to play off him and he gives us a very potent option at the line-out, which is essential," the coach said. "The way I see it, we have the right balance."

England are fully aware of the need to grab the game by the scruff of the neck. In Rowell's words, the approach will be to "absorb and impose", but Phil de Glanville, his captain, put it more bluntly this week when he said: "We know all about the Irish in the first 20 minutes, when their endeavour is at its height and the storm is there to be weathered. There is no question of it being anything other than fierce, but equally there is no question of us sitting back and waiting for things to happen. If we don't want to find ourselves points down, we'll have to take our game to them."

De Glanville is convinced that Eric Elwood, the Irish outside-half, will open proceedings with an aerial bombardment aimed not so much at Tim Stimpson, who is a rock under the high ball, but at the more vulnerable wings, Tony Underwood and Jon Sleightholme. "Our back three accept that they face a test, the like of which they will not have encountered before. They've been practising high takes all week, but it's always more difficult to handle this sort of assault in a game situation and it's up to each and every one of us to get back there and support them."

"The whole match will be a massive physical confrontation. The Irish have no frailties in that department – from one to 15, they will threaten us physically – so I am looking for control, discipline and total commitment."

If De Glanville does not receive all that and more from his players, England will undoubtedly be forced to swallow a repeat dose of 1993, when they were blown to all points of the compass by an Irish side that redefined the meaning of the word "rampant". But the flurry of tries in the final quarter of the match against Scotland eased many of the terrors circulating around an inexperienced England camp and provided the main men do their stuff in the eye of the storm, the kitchen sink should miss its target.

A female punter has wagered £46,000, thought to be the largest amount ever staked on a rugby match, on England defeating Ireland. The same woman successfully staked £18,000 on England beating Scotland a fortnight ago and stands to collect over £15,000 if her side win today at odds of 1-3.

Ashdown honoured in Nikon Press Awards

David Ashdown, the Independent's Chief Sports Photographer, has been highly commended in the Nikon Press Awards. Ashdown was runner-up in the Sports Photographer of the Year category, which was won by David Joiner of the Popperfoto agency. Ashdown's portfolio of five photographs included the above picture of the British high jumper Steve Smith on his way to winning a bronze medal in last summer's Olympic Games in Atlanta.

Emburey praises Croft

Cricket

Robert Croft was told he could have a 10-year Test career after starting once again for England yesterday. The 26-year old Glamorgan off-spinner has been the biggest success story of this winter's campaign in Zimbabwe and New Zealand and has proved he can be the long-term successor to John Emburey.

After watching Croft's 3 for 49 from 24 overs to keep England in contention on the first day of the final Test in Christchurch, Emburey led the appreciation for the Welshman's growing stature.

Emburey, England's assistant coach, played the last of his 64 Tests in 1995 after a 19-year international career. "The ball didn't seam as much as we thought and there wasn't much swing either," he said. "But Croft has bowled better on this tour than I've ever seen him. He's definitely matured and he could be an England spinner for another 10 or 12 years. Most spinners have their best years later in their careers."

"He's got a good loop and he's a bigger spinner of the ball than I was. He also has a good change of pace and flight to it."

"And, when he's needed to push the ball through a bit quicker such as during the Wellington Test, he has not lost his spin or the late dip which are his trademarks."

Croft's tactics against Stephen Fleming, New Zealand's top player, have illustrated just how dependable and effective a bowler he has become after just four Test appearances.

Operating from over the wicket against him, Croft spun the ball just enough and cramped Fleming's style and eventually grabbed the key wicket of the day for England by having him stumped by Alec Stewart.

Fleming said: "I perhaps came down the pitch a little too early and he held it back a bit. I knew I was out, but at the time I felt we needed to be more aggressive and try to get our total up to around 250. We have to be positive out there because we have to win the game to square the series."

Dominic Cork, however, is still struggling for form despite making an early breakthrough with the new ball.

Emburey said: "He's lacking rhythm at the moment, but that can come back as quickly as it goes. He is well aware of the areas he needs to improve on, and there are also a couple of little technical things which are on his mind."

"I felt he tried to bowl a bit too quick today, and as a consequence he lost a touch of control. We are all working with him and talking with him, but at the end of the day it is the player himself who has to go out there and perform on the park."

England's management, though admitting they misread the pitch conditions, pronounced themselves happy with New Zealand's first-day total.

Emburey added: "The pitch was very green, and still a bit damp this morning. We have done well bowling first in other games in New Zealand, and we thought we could get among them early on especially after winning so well in the second Test in Wellington. It didn't quite happen, but we stuck at it pretty well."

First day's play, page 28

In Monday's 20-page sports
section

"Even the president told me he wanted me to play a big part in the future of South Africa, but I'm not so sure about politics. I'm still just a student at the university of life."

François Pienaar talks to Ian Stafford

Published by Newspaper Publishing PLC, 1 Canada Square, Canary Wharf, London E14 3DL, and printed at Mirror Colour Press, St Albans Road, Watford Avenue, Watford, Herts. Back issues available from Historic Newspapers, 01888 540370. Saturday 15 February 1997. Registered as a newspaper with the Post Office.

The Eurostar Dictionary of Flying.

Air Pressure

Airline

Air Turbulence

Airsickness

Getting to airport on time.Queue to check-in.Scrambling to disembark.Realising that you should have gone by Eurostar.

Definition of Eurostar:
The high speed passenger train travelling from Waterloo and Ashford,
Kent, direct to the centre of Paris or Brussels without any of the hassles of flying. Look us up next time you need to travel there.

0345 30 30 30

or see an appointed travel agent or railway station.
Calls charged at local rate. All calls are monitored for quality.

THE INDEPENDENT CROSSWORD

No 3223, Saturday 15 February

By Spurious

Friday's solution

Last Saturday's solution

ACROSS

- Helps to avoid cases of mistaken identity (7, 6)
- Chief wanting macho type to accept promotion (1)
- Road works still around from time immemorial (4, 3)
- Flag, one knight's brought back (4)
- River visible from stronghold on height (5)
- In south of France, it's stupid going back to Italy (4)
- Gambling activity involving criminal mob a good deal, on reflection (7)
- Quaint old chapel characteristic of important period (7)
- Rule by the grace of God in Judea, perhaps (7)
- Fluttering in (7)
- A king enters church in Genoa, for instance (4)
- Award-winning broadcast is curious (5)
- Weapon left in bed (4)
- Regeneration some backward British tribe revealed (7)
- Meeting about higher education facility on French island (7)
- They're used to evaluate different tenders (8, 5)

DOWN

- Union leader could identify a potentially dangerous element (7)
- Injured in rugby match for instance (4)
- Party seated in a long, flimsy craft (7)
- First gear (7)
- Young man from London area, by the sound of it (4)
- Showing a certain immature student upset his dad (7)
- Whereby good wishes are conveyed from present-day queen, perhaps? (9, 4)
- Illumination to be found in Soho club? (5, 8)
- Huge crowd in store, reportedly (5)
- Value certain features of new orthodoxy (5)
- Judge given miniaturised instrument on wooden base – a record player (7)
- Ceramic article without merit (7)
- Wrought brazier is unusual (7)
- Worship initially involving wrinkle oldies? (7)
- Leading parade that's heading off (4)
- Caribbean country about to introduce unemployment benefit (4)

The first five correct solutions to this week's puzzle opened next Thursday receive hardback copies of the new Oxford Dictionary of Quotations. Answers and winners' names will be published next Saturday. Send solutions to Saturday Crossword, P.O. Box 2014, The Independent, 1 Canada Square, Canary Wharf, London E14 3DL. Please use the box number and postcode and give your own postcode. Last week's winners: John Patrick, London SE19; Philip Nokes, Lyme Regis; Jo Steer, Fleet; Daphne Ripley, Shipston; C. Latham, Colyton.

West Ham capture
Hartson for £5mFootball
NICK DUXBURY

Good business for John Hartson yesterday saw the 21-year-old Arsenal striker pick up £250,000 as his cut of the fee that took him from north to east London. Whether paying a club-record £5m was good business for West Ham United remains to be seen.

The Hammers – frantic to preserve their Premiership status at seemingly any cost – offered the Welsh international a five-year contract 10 days after signing Paul Kitson from Newcastle United for £2.3m. Both made their debuts at Derby County today.

Peter Storr, the Hammers managing director, had promised West Ham supporters another player who would be able to "spin off" Kitson. The spin-off for Hartson was another nice little earner, adding to the £125,000 he picked up when George Graham spent £2.5m to sign him from Luton Town two years ago.

Hartson, described by his new manager, Harry Redknapp, as "the centre-forward for this club way into the foreseeable future" needed little persuading to move, having played second fiddle to the Bergkamp-Wright partnership.

"Although I enjoyed it at Highbury and learned a lot, I can't really say I am sorry to leave. My time there was a bit up and down," said Hartson, who has scored four goals in 18 starts this season.

He added that West Ham, who have linked the fee to appearance and goals, have a "great future" and can stay up. "I know it's down to me to get the goals to make it happen."

West Ham's previous record fee was £2.4m for the Romanian striker Florin Raducioiu, now back with Espanyol.

Although England fans will not thank him for it, Chelsea's Ruud Gullit is to make another bid for the Italian captain, Paolo Maldini. Gullit was quoted a month ago, but he believes recent acquisitions have left them with a top-heavy squad.

"If that's the money they're still talking about it's out of the question," said a cautious Gullit, who will broach the subject when Chelsea visit Milan in a friendly next week.

Liverpool 'nursery', page 31